John B. Finch first became famous through his exertions towards checking the evils of the liquor traffic in Nebraska. He was the author of the high tax law of that state, which provided for a $1,000 tax, but the framers of that measure to regulate and restrict the liquor traffic made a third party prohibitionist out of him, and he has been for some years an earnest advocate of absolute prohibition. He was right worthy grand templar of the order of good templars in the United States, and chairman of the national prohibition committee. Latterly he has been at Evanston, Ill.

Mr. Finch was about 40 years old. During the latter years of his life he was frequently in Michigan, his last appearance here having been during the prohibition amendment campaign last spring, when he made a rousing speech in Detroit in answer to D. Bethune Duffield and Charles A. Kent.

Mr. Finch spoke in Tecumseh during the campaign on the amendment last spring, and we think we do not exaggerate the facts in saying that he made the strongest and most logical prohibition speech ever delivered in Tecumseh. The third party will seriously feel his lost.

DIED.

GILMAN—In Breedsville, Mich., on the 29th ult., Mr. Jason Pomeroy Gilman, aged about 40 years. The disease was a malarial fever terminating in peritonitis which caused his death.

Mr. Gilman leaves a wife and son, a lad at out 9 years of age to mourn their loss. The body of the deceased was brought to Tecumseh for burial on Saturday last and the funeral service held at his father's residence, Mr. James S. Gilman, at 2 o'clock of the same day. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather at the hour appointed for the funeral, a large number of friends and relatives assembled to testify their sympathy for the afflicted family and the kindly esteem in which the deceased was held. Mr. Gilman was a Tecumseh man—having been born and brought up here. In 1876 he was married to Miss W. Osborn. About six years since he removed to Breedsville and engaged in the Hardware business, in which business he continued till the time of his death.

A dutiful, affectionate son, a tender and loving husband, and a watchful, careful father is called away from earth and now "rests from his labors." "Requiescat in pace."

The members of the family wish to express their thanks to those friends who so kindly and freely aided them in their affliction with labors and sympathy.

A Card.

Viets House, New Harmony, Ind., Sept. 25th, 1887.

Mr. Wm. McCowen. Dear Sir: The report in the Adrian Press about your son and the girls at the hotel is all a base lie. Your son has not been anything but a gentleman while here. I have writen the Adrian Press in regard to it and think they will make it right. Your's Respectfully,

JOS. HOFREITER, Prop.

The amount of crow that has been absorbed by the people of this village during the past few months is enormous. But I notice we all live through it, as the undertaking business has been extremely stagnant. Now let us prepare for Thanksgiving and a change of diet. Yours,

WM. McCOWEN.

A fire entirely destroyed a small shed in the rear of Eaton's furniture store at Hudson last Monday morning. The burnt and charred remains of a man were taken from the ruins. His identity is unknown, but it is probable that it was some one who had used the shed for a lodging place and caused the fire by carelessness with a pipe or cigar.

A later dispatch to the Free Press says:

The inquest held to-day over the remains of the unknown man taken from the burning shed this morning revealed evidences of foul play. It is suspected that he was assaulted by roughs and thrown into the shed. He was a railroad man and was to have begun work with one of the C. J. & M. gang this morning.

"All I have to say about the paper is that the editor is getting terribly dull," said an old subscriber. "You think the editor is getting dull do you?" rejoined the occupant of the splint-bottomed editorial chair.

Yes, sir. I do, most emphatically."

"Well, I'll call up the next scissor grinder that comes along.

PORTRAIT AND BIOGRAPHICAL ALBUM OF LENAWEE COUNTY, MICH.

The following from the Adrian Press is self explanatory.

There hardly has been an event in an historical or literary sense of as much importance to the people of Lenawee county since its settlement, as the advent of Chapman Bros., the extensive publishing house of Chicago, who are here through their representative A. J. Little for the purpose of publishing an edition of their elegant portrait and biographical albums.

As works of art and literary merit their albums are unexcelled; as treasures of biographical, historical matter and personal incidents they are invaluable, and as ornaments for the center-table or library, they have no superior.

We have seen these albums—those published for other counties—and know the reputation this house has established through their publication in other states.

None are more worthy of a place in history than the pioneers, who breaking away from the luxurious surroundings of an advanced civilization, have penetrated the wild forests and subduing them converted them into cultivated homes and beautiful cities; the agriculturist, who raises the necessary products to support life; the mechanic, who constructs and repairs the machinery; the merchant, who supplies the goods; the teacher, who educates the youth; the law maker, who builds the structure for civil government, and the physician, who administers to the ills that human flesh is heir to, all are equally deserving of remembrance, and their good works chronicled in a manner that will secure their perpetuation. Memories fail and our pioneers are fast passing away.

Once recorded in books it is safe, for they live and go down the ages; they are immortal.

This great work, besides containing the important matter mentioned above, will have full page portraits and biographies of all the presidents of the United States, and also the Governors of the State of Michigan. The whole will be bound in genuine Turkish morocco, in quarto form, printed on the best book paper with gold edges and gold embossed side.

From our knowledge of this publishing house and the gentlemen connected with them, it gives us pleasure to indorse them and their proposed work, and hope the people of Lenawee county will give them every encouragement, that they may prosecute it to completion.

Mr. G. C. Atchinson, who has charge of this part of the County, is in Tecumseh and we bespeak for him the encouragement and support of our citizens. We notice that the representative men of Adrian, in all branches of business and professional and commercial pursuits have gone into this work, and that is virtually endorsing it which should commend the same to our people.

Chapman Bros and their representatives receive the highest encouragement of press and people wherever they go and their portrait and biographical album are [illegible] in this county.

AN IMPORTANT WILL

[illegible] Tecumseh, and requested [illegible] to draw up his will. The document was written [illegible] Mr. Hatch [illegible] Now that the will is drawn, [illegible] said Mr. Hatch, "what shall I do with it?"

"You can take it home, put it in your safe, or with your bankers, to keep it safely," [illegible] Mr. Hatch took the document, and [illegible] with it.

On the occasion of different conversations held by the judge and his partner with Mr. Hatch, the latter expressed himself as thoroughly satisfied that he had made such disposition of his property as would be entirely satisfactory after his decease. To other friends he talked in a similar strain.

March 21st, 1887, Mr. Hatch died. An examination of his papers failed to bring to light the existence of any will. It had been deposited neither at the probate office, nor with his bankers nor with his lawyers. A complete and thorough search could not discover it, and yet, only a few days prior to his death, the deceased had said that its provisions suited him exactly. It has never been found.

Mr. Hatch owned considerable property, and the missing document had written it as follows: To his son, Samuel, he left the homestead, consisting of 80 acres of land; 80 acres of land cornering on the homestead were divided equally between his sons, Samuel and James, the south half to the former and the north half to the latter; 50 acres of land, which also cornered on the last mentioned property, and was diagonally divided by a ditch running northeast and southwest, were also bequeathed the brothers, the part lying east of the ditch to Samuel and that west of it to James; to a married daughter he left $1,000, which was to be a lien on the homestead, and which was to be paid by Samuel; the personal property was to be divided equally.

At the time the will was drawn up, Mr. Hatch stated that he had favored his son Samuel, for the reason that he had done nothing for him during his lifetime, while James had received substantial aid at various times.

When the estate came to the court for probate, a contest came with it, James claimed an equal division of the property, and Samuel insisted that the missing will should stand. Arguments on both sides were heard by Judge Geddes, and were concluded several weeks ago, the judge reserving his decision until Oct. 3.

James claimed that no such will was ever propounded, that deceased was mentally incompetent to execute a will, and that if any such existed it was made by reason of undue influence. A large amount of testimony, involving the points at issue, was heard by the judge.

In an able decision, rendered Monday, in which reference was made to a large number of authorities, Judge Geddes said that with the justice or injustice of the instrument the court had no concern. If the evidence satisfied the court that a will was made, and its contents as stated, and that it was unrevoked at the time of the decease of the testator, it had no discretion, and the court was so satisfied. A large number of authorities, evidencing deep research upon the subject, were quoted by the judge in rendering an opinion sustaining the provisions of the lost will.

GOOD ENOUGH FOR HIM.

Mr. Asa B. Rowley, Druggist, was induced to try some of the Papillon Catarrh Cure by his customers, after several physicians predicted he would soon have consumption from an aggravated case of Catarrh. He says: "The result was unprecedented. I commenced to get well after the first application, and am now, after a few weeks, entirly cured." Papillon extract of flax Catarrh Cure will do all that is claimed for it. Large bottles $1.00.

October.

October is the month that seems
All woven with midsummer dreams
She brings for us the golden days
That fill the air with smoky haze.
She brings for us the lisping breeze
And wakes the gossips in the trees,
Who whisper near the vacant nest
Forsaken by its feathered guest.
Now half the birds forget to sing,
And half of them have taken wing,
Before their pathway shall be lost
Beneath the gossamer of frost;
Now one by one the gay leaves fly
Zigzag across the yellow sky;
They rustle here and flutter there,
Until the bough hangs chill and bare.
What joy for us, what happiness
Shall cheer the day, the night shall bless?
'Tis Hallow-e'en, the very last
Shall keep for us remembrance fast.
When every child shall duck the head
To find the precious pippin red!
ST. NICHOLAS.

The Adrian overall company will become a verity. Messrs. Hand and Voorheese have rented the required space in the building of the Adrian Brick and Tile machine company. They expect to inaugurate the business with a force of 35 hands.—Adrian Press.

The Brooklyn fair association which started out a few years since with such a flourish of trumpets has come to grief. The grounds are to be sold on mortgage next week and as the fair this year was almost a total failure the probabilities are that this is the last of the Brooklyn fairs.

Contractor Pierce says he has no doubt but oil or gas will be struck at the experimental well. The indications are all good so far, but boring will have to be done to a depth of 2,000 or 3,000 feet. Casing arrived yesterday morning and will be put in at once, when the work will proceed more rapidly.—Blissfield Advance.

The Niagara grape is proving a profitable variety to J. W. Helme, who ships to Chicago at a net price of a little more than 11cts. per lb. The grapes sell in Chicago at 14 cents and the variety is sought for. The Niagara seems to be as prolific a fruiter as the Concord while the grapes sell far above the latter in price.—Adrian Press.

Here is a truism: "A little item in a newspaper will sometimes make a man an enemy to the poor for life, but it won't stop him from reading it. It merely changes him from a subscriber to a borrower, or his better half will call at the office and subscribe for it in her name. Every publisher can recall the names of citizens who come under this head."

We acknowledge a call from brother Stearns, of the Adrian Press, last Friday. He wished to look over our Shipman engine, with a view of putting one in the Press office. He has tried a steam engine, gas engine, water motor and a hot air engine. Now he proposes to use kerosene for fuel. With all these different kinds of power, there are yet people who say the Press is run with wind.—Hudson Post.

We don't like to have it get out what a wicked town Brooklyn is, but we feel that it is our duty to remonstrate with the boys for playing ball on Sunday. This has been going on for several weeks, much to the horror of our religiously inclined citizens and the indignation of sisters, wives and mothers. We had hoped that one man getting a tooth knocked out would be a solemn and sufficient warning, but it seems to have had no effect. We havn't any cranky notions as to Sabbath breaking, but we do believe in drawing a line somewhere, and we draw it at base ball playing.—Brooklyn Exponent.

Deny yourself 25 cents worth of tobacco and get the Courier until Jan. 1st. The benefits are mutual.—Addison Courier.

Yes, just save the tobacco and hand it to the Courier man. He will chew the weed and send you the paper. If the tobacco comes in faster than he can accommodate it, he might send it to Tecumseh for Stacy to chew. Or they might use the tobacco as they do items, which are first used at Tecumseh and then chewed a second time at Addison.—Hudson Post.

All right, and when we get through with it we will pass it over to neighbor Scarritt and he can put it in his pipe and smoke it.

A farmer near Hudson one morning went walking in the fields and found a large piece of fresh pork. Remembering the story about the manna falling from heaven, he soon convinced himself that the miracle was about to be re-enacted, with the difference that pork was to rain down instead of bread. He had scarcely got home before a neighbor came with a mournful tale of how he had been robbed of a prospective meat dinner. It burst ed the manna theory, and instead it was thought that a dog must have stolen the portion of deceased hog, and left it for the farmer to regard as provision dropped from heaven.—Hudson Post.

TWO MATRIMONIAL EVENTS.

Whether the new divorce law is the cause or not, the fact is that the matrimonial market has been exceedingly lively of late. Two weddings occurred yesterday in which Adrian and Tecumseh are jointly interested.

At the residence of Lyman Gray near the scene of Adrian's recent sensation, the marriage of Joseph A. Root to Mr. Tipp's sister was celebrated. The party was entirely composed of relatives and intimate friends of the contracting parties. As it was no secret as to preliminaries, it was a cozy home affair throughout, as the bride's parents seem to have wished to appreciate. The bride's dress showed the esteem in which the parties are held. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's father, four miles South of Adrian, and the bridal trip consisted of a drive from Lt. Gray's home to that of the groom at the close of the wedding festivities. The groom is a brother of the late Dr. Chas. Rynd, and is highly esteemed where he lives. The bride was born in Tecumseh, but nearly twelve years of her childhood were passed in Ireland, where she received her education and where the acquaintance was formed which led to yesterday's nuptials. The congratulations of a host of friends will greet them at the beginning of their new journey.

At six o'clock in the evening at the residence of Mrs. Henry C. Colgate, the bride's mother, in the city of Adrian, Mr Harry B. Root, of this village, was united in marriage to Miss Mattie M. Colgate. A few relatives only of the parties were present at the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. R. O. Cooper, of Adrian, in his usual happy manner. A few choice and costly gifts added much to the interest of the occasion. The twain came to Tecumseh immediately after the ceremony and intend for the present to make their home here, with Mr. Root's parents.

The bride is a graduate of the Adrian High School, and is one of the most accomplished young ladies of that city. Harry has been regarded for some time as one of the most desirable young bachelors, and no man among us is better qualified to become a benedict. May their future life be illumined by the sunshine of prosperity and joy.

Dr. Bennett will be at the Lilley House Monday, Oct. 10. Asthma, hay fever, dyspepsia, heart and nervous prostration and a disease that cures it, and easily cured by his new system of treatment. "Never fails." Hernia (rupture) radically cured in one week, be they 5 or 75 years of age. If there is within 2 miles of Tecumseh a post office is there one that wishes to come and see how this is done, then look up the results already given.

PRESIDENT AND WIFE RECEIVED IN INDIANA WITH ACCLAIM.

An Enthusiastic Time at Indianapolis and Terre Haute—A Visit to Mrs. Hendricks—St. Louis Reached in a Blaze of Glory and a Roar of Applause—The City Hall Nightly Illuminated—A Quiet Sunday.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1.—[illegible] Cincinnati and Marietta railroad began their journey over that road and Baltimore. They left Washington at 8 A.M. under a bright sky and pleasant auspices. The special train bearing the President and party left the Baltimore & Potomac depot promptly at 8:30 [illegible] Friday morning.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 1.—After a trip [illegible] of Ohio was filled with enthusiasm and [illegible] the President and lady arrived at [illegible] City Saturday night at 11:45. All Sunday from the national capital the states and towns passed by the train were [illegible] with people who wished to get a glimpse of the President. Hundreds of the principal [illegible] had [illegible] in only a few minutes were [illegible] one of which was at Pittsburgh [illegible] minutes, where there was an immense [illegible] and the firing and fireworks [illegible] was crossed at night and no sleep was had from the trip until Indianapolis was reached. Here there was a press [illegible] the capital, where the greatest welcome [illegible] President to the state and the President briefly answered. The streets were rivers of humanity, and it wasn't still after midnight, and Mrs. Cleveland was [illegible] become of the [illegible] and distributed her smiles and gracious words of kindness. A visit was paid to Mrs. Hendricks.

At Terre Haute another stop was made, and there was a procession [illegible] the State Normal [illegible] and through streets densely massed with people, who cheered the President and wife to the echo. Here Senator Voorhees introduced the President, and Col. "Dick" Thompson delivered the welcoming address, to which the President replied. Once more aboard the special train, [illegible] when the way was all but one [illegible] crowds who wanted to see the party, and the reception at St. Louis. There were few speeches on the trip, and would not be repetition [illegible] fact is the train sped by [illegible] long way in the rear its brilliant lights [illegible] President and Mrs. Cleveland [illegible] form bowing to the people in [illegible] that was the scene.

At St. Louis the [illegible] was unique. The streets were thronged with [illegible] cheering its way, the air was full of the flash of fireworks, and the city was at the station. It required a [illegible] of mounted police to make [illegible] and the carriage containing the President and his wife was drawn rapidly to the residence of Mayor Francis, [illegible] cheering [illegible] was passed [illegible] going through the city in the afternoon and evening.

THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR

Questions To Be Discussed at the Convention at Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 1.—The general assembly of the Knights of Labor of America convened here Monday, and it will be the most important labor gathering yet held. The session will last about one week. The question to be considered Master Workman Powderly and the alleged falling off in the membership of the order will be the most important topics in the deliberations of the [illegible]. The membership in good standing was [illegible] combined in 5,892 [illegible] assemblies. Each delegate to the convention will represent 3,000 members, so that the convention will comprise from 150 to 200 delegates.

There will be some opposition to the new constitution, but it will be adopted by a large majority. Questions with the trades unionists, Socialism and temperance, will be among the questions discussed. Mr. Powderly, it may be safely asserted, will be triumphantly re-elected.

A strong effort will be made to secure the establishment of district assembly 1.6 of New York, but it is doubtful if it is successful. Sometimes assembly 128 of Michigan will protest against the temperance platform of the order. It is said they want the privilege of bringing beer into their sessions. Many of the general officers are already here.

Foreign Soldiers in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Oct. 1.—The event of Sunday connected with the military encampment and semi-centennial festivities was the arrival of about 100 soldiers from Sweden, Norway, and Denmark, about the half of them being officers. They were met at the railway station by a company of marines from the United steamer Michigan, which is lying in the harbor and will stay here during the encampment, two companies of the National guard and a number of Swedish, Norwegian and Danish civic societies, and escorted to the soldiers' home. The camp is rapidly filling up, and Sunday's arrivals bring the First Swedish troop, O. N. G., the Haymakers of the Fourth Ohio, and the Minneapolis Light Horse squadron, Iowa National Guard, and Company A, United States cavalry, besides numerous drum corps and bands. The encampment will undoubtedly be a success.

LOUIS, Oct. 1.—[illegible] in St. Louis Sunday of the fiftieth anniversary of the ordination of Pope Leo's life to the priesthood was the most imposing religious demonstration which has taken place in the Mississippi valley. It is estimated that fifty thousand people were in attendance. Bishop [illegible] delivered a sermon in German, and Archbishop Kenrick in English. Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, and Bishop Keane, of Richmond, Va., were present. Telegrams were read from the Pope and Cardinal Gibbons, and a cablegram was sent to the Pope.

Tried to Shoot a Governor.

KANSAS CITY, Oct. 2.—News reached this city Sunday night of an attempt to shoot Governor Martin, at Atchison, Kan., Saturday night. Martin remonstrated, when the fellow drew a large pistol, but he was seized by a policeman before he could use it, and locked up.

THE GREAT YACHT RACE.

London Papers Acknowledge the Superiority of the Volunteer.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—The cup stays in America. Friday the second of the great yacht races for the America's cup was sailed [illegible] miles—in a good breeze. The Volunteer took the lead at the start, and [illegible] and kept footed her [illegible] the Thistle, crossing the winning line [illegible] minutes ahead of the former. [illegible] again of the wheels to [illegible].

LONDON, Oct. 1.—The Telegraph says in respect to the yacht race: "We are prepared to hear Englishmen say our cup a sailing [illegible] to attempt [illegible] the unpopular word to attempt [illegible] the honor or glory that belongs to the victors. We are sorry that the racing record shows so many times we won over us, but it must be confessed that the Volunteer is the better boat all round. The Thistle would probably outsail the Volunteer in a long sea voyage. The Thistle, though defeated, is not disgraced, and England hopes to repeat the challenge in 1889."

WHAT THE THISTLE WAS AFTER.

The Times says: "It is now perfectly clear that if we hope to beat the Americans in their own waters and bring back the cup, we must condescend to take a leaf out of their book on the art of yacht building."

HOLOCAUST IN DETROIT.

A Fire in a Cheap Lodging-House Results in Loss of Life.

DETROIT, Oct. 1.—Fire broke out at about 5:45 o'clock Saturday morning in the English kitchen, a cheap lodging-house at 221 Jefferson avenue. When the fire department arrived the upper windows of the four-story building were alive with half-dressed lodgers screaming for help. All except three were rescued in safety. One of the three was burned almost beyond recognition; the second died from suffocation before he was removed from the building, and the third, Charles Peterson, aged 22, single, though rescued alive, is in a condition which renders his recovery extremely doubtful. The dead are Eustin Stroh, of Breckenridge, Mo., and an unknown man, aged about 25 years. The loss by the fire is about $5,000.

A Legislative Blunder.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Oct. 1.—A strange blunder, committed by the last legislature, has been brought to the attention of the public. The regular state election will be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, which this year falls on Nov. 8. By some oversight the legislature when it divided the sixth judicial district in two specified that the election should be held on the first Tuesday in November. It happens this year that one is on Nov. 1 and the other Nov. 8. This will compel two elections. These two districts comprise all the counties in northern Ohio.

I have won the trust and confidence of the people, and am engaged in sowing the seed for a splendid future civilization. It is out of the question to leave. All I desire England to do is to invoke a free passage from here to the coast that trading may be carried on with safety."

COMRADES IN COUNCIL.

THE G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT APPROVES THE NEW PENSION BILL.

Also Adds Some Subjects Upon Which Legislation Is Wanted—The Mormon Question Sat Down on—Columbus, Ohio, Next Year—The Women's Corps—Visit to Lincoln's Tomb.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 28.—For three days there has been a steady stream of veterans pouring into this city, until now there are not less than 100,000 strangers in the city—veterans, their wives and children and friends; and an uncomfortable throng they are. The clerk of the weather seems to have let himself out to spoil the festivities. The city is gay with bunting of red, white and blue, and the decorations are magnificent, but, alas, the downpour of rain which began Monday and continued without intermission all day Tuesday gave everything a bedraggled and woe-begone appearance. The streets Tuesday were miniature rivers, and the skies a black dome. Thousands of tents which had been erected for the accommodation of the boys in blue have been rendered uninhabitable, and the men who were to have occupied them were wandering about without a place to lay their heads. Every hotel in town was full to overflowing, and the finding of places of refuge for the thousands, many of them women and children, was a serious affair. Under such auspices as these the annual encampment of the G. A. R., which was expected to be the greatest meeting since the war, has taken a decidly blue aspect.

Tuesday the procession was to have taken place, but with the rain falling in sheets, of course this had to be abandoned, and the delegates gathered in knots in hotel lobbies, cigar stores and saloons and talked of what the encampment would do. Most of the notables—Gen. Fairchild, Governor Oglesby, Gen. Tuttle, Louis Wagner, of Pennsylvania; Governor Rusk, of Wisconsin; Governor Stoneman, of California; Governor Fietcher, of Missouri; Governor Crawford, of Kansas; Governor Evans, of Colorado; Governor Saunders, of Nebraska; Governor, Pierrepont, of Virginia; Governor William Sprague, of Rhode Island; Vice President Hanhibal Hamlin, are here. An extended programme of receptions, luncheons and dinners had been prepared for their entertainment during the week, but it is likely to be cut very short because of the execrable weather.

The opening reception took place at the merchants' exchange Tuesday night, and was largely attended. Mayor Francis made an eloquent reception speech, and Gen. Fairchild responded. Among the guests on the platform were Governors Rusk, Oglesby, Larrabee and Alger. Gen. Sherman is keeping himself secluded, and will say nothing to reporters.

Commander-in-Chief Fairchild was made the recipient at 7:30 Tuesday evening of a handsome badge of past commander-in-chief and Adjt. Gray of a gold watch.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 29.—It was a watery outlook that greeted the Grand Army boys when they got out bed of Wednesday morning. The rain was still falling and with the apparent intention of figuring it out on this line if it took till Christmas. But the boys in blue had come to St. Louis to parade—for one thing—and they wouldn't be denied. So at 10:30 about 20,000 of them divided into ten divisions were in line waiting for the starting gun, while the streets were thronged with onlookers and the stands erected on the route were full of people in spite of the prevailing wetness. The gun boomed, and as its echoes died away, as if the clerk of the weather had denied it as a signal, too, the floodgates were opened, and as the veterans took up their march they walked in a perfect flood of rain. But they had met worse showers than this, and with a cheer that flew down the line they plunged forward, Gens. Fairchild and Grier in the lead, and had their parade. They were a motley throng. It is no use to talk of a brilliant pageant. There was nothing brilliant about it. The marchers were covered with every conceivable wrap that would help to shed the water, and the flags and banners hung limp from their staffs. Nothing, however, could repress the enthusiasm, and the harder it rained the more tumultuous grew the cheers, which were taken up by the throngs on the sidewalks and stands and echoed and re-echoed all along the line. Gen. Fairchild, Gen. Sherman, and the distinguished visitors left the line at the reviewing stand and stood there in the rain watching the boys pass and leaving to the cheers given them for eighty-four minutes, which was the time occupied in passing. Just as the parade disbanded, the clouds, as if vanquished by the irrepressible determination of the veterans, broke away and the day was clear and pleasant.

At 4 o'clock the encampment met and Gen. Fairchild made his annual address, which was interrupted frequently by loud applause. He warned the delegates not to permit politics to enter the debates of the encampment, and congratulated them that heretofore they had kept the department free from the influence out. He expressed his disappointment at the defeat of the pension bill in the last congress, and said a bill had been prepared and adopted by nine-tenths of the members, which, he had no doubt, would pass the next congress. A service pension bill, he said, was urged by many, but he advised the delegates to take what they could get and leave better things for the future. Regarding the rebel flag episode he said the soldiers and loyal people, north and south, did not want a reopening of the chasm that had yawned twenty-five years ago, and would do nothing to reopen it, but would join in opposing any attempt to elevate symbols of disunion to special honor, and do anything possible to exult all that pertains to loyalty to the Union, to the end that the people may revere the symbols of Union, and never couple them with those of sentiments antagonistic thereto.

The annual report showed that there were 372,674 members of the Grand Army; that $250,000 had been expended for relief, and 400 comrades had died during the year. A committee consisting of Alger of Wisconsin, Burdette of Washington City, H. H. Thomas of Illinois, J. C. Robinson of New York, Beaver of Pennsylvania, Hamlin of Maine, and C. S. Nash of Massachusetts, was appointed to co-operate with the Illinois trustees of the Logan monument.

The Women's Relief Corps met at Harmonic hall and organized. The report showed that 50,000 women were members of the order, 13,000 of whom had been admitted during the past year.

The veterans spent the evening in holding reunions and campfires, and having a general good time. Thousands left for home during the day, but there are so many here that the numbers don't seem to be diminished.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 30.—The G. A. R. encampment Thursday transacted a large amount of business. The report of the committee on pensions was adopted. It advocates the new pension bill which gives a pension of $12 per month to veterans who are now or who may hereafter become dependent; a continuance of pensions to widows in their own right; an increase in the pensions to minor children, and pensions to parents to date from date of dependence. The report stated that the new bill would take 12,000 veterans out of poorhouses. The report is stated as far short of what should be granted, though it contains a recognition of the principle that pensions may be granted without absolute poverty, disability the result of service. A mild censure of the veto of the dependent pensions bill is contained in the report, where it is stated that the veto was referred to the G. A. R. in pursuance of a decision of opinion, which came back almost unanimous that the veto ignored the promises of the nation, a remembrance of the soldiers' sacrifices and a grateful recognition of their services. The following measures are recommended to be urged upon congress:

All the recommendations for service and equalization of pensions for special disabilities made in the reports of the national commander and the s

A pension of $12 per month to all widows of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the late war.

Increased pensions for the severer disabilities substantially as presented in the bill presented in the United States Mounted Veterans' league.

Pensions for the survivors of rebel pris substantially as proposed in the bill of the Na Association of Ex-Prisoners of War.

Increased pensions for loss of hearing, eyesight, reduction of the arrears tax, and to exhibit the operation of bounties.

The same pension for the widow of the men relative to union soldiers of the Union army. Send A. Logan as a tribute to the widows of those typical regimes. Thomas, the rock of Chickamauga, and Hancock, always the superb.

The committee on Gen. Fairchild's address approved of all his recommendations, and suggested that the order present the commander-in-chief with a testimonial. A resolution declaring Mormonism treason, and that the G. A. R. should go on record as in favor of its suppression, was defeated as a matter not coming within the purpose of the order. A resolution was adopted asking congress to require the officials at the surgeon general's office to furnish to veterans at their request their medical record. After a sharp contest, Columbus, Ohio, was selected as the next place of meeting.

The Women's Relief Corps settled the dispute in Indiana by declaring both bodies in that state regular until a state convention can be held.

During the day the reunion by states was held and was a tolerable success, but the weather was against it, as it rained by spurts all day. At night the industrial parade came off and was a brilliant pageant, illuminated by the thousands of gas jets that lined the streets in arches and clusters.

Some hundreds of veterans went on the excursion to Lincoln's tomb at Springfield, Ills., but it rained there all day, and no programme could be carried out. Speeches were made, however, at the monument by Governor Rusk, Senator Cullom and others.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 1.—The last session of the G. A. R. encampment was held Friday. The principal feature of the morning was a lively debate over Vandervoort's resolution censuring the president for vetoing the dependent pension bill. The resolutions were reported adversely, but Vandervoort insisted that they ought to be adopted. He was answered by Gen. Grosvenor, of Ohio, and a vote resulted in an overwhelming defeat for the resolutions. Election of officers was then proceeded with, and Judge Ray, of Minneapolis, was elected commander-in-chief on the first ballot, Slocum receiving 153 votes. Ray made a short address of thanks, and then the other officers were elected as follows: Senior vice commander, Nelson Cole, of Missouri; junior vice commander, J. C. Linehan, of New Hampshire; sergeant general, Lawrence Donahue, and chaplain-in-chief Rev. Edward Anderson. It was resolved to erect an equestrian statue of Gen. Logan at Washington City, to which Governor Alger, and Gen. Lennon, of New York, each subscribed $1,000. The officers were installed, and the annual encampment adjourned sine die.

The notables of the encampment attended a banquet at the Lindell hotel at night. Among those present were Gen. Sherman, Hon. Hannibal Hamlin, Gen. John M. Palmer, Gen. Slocum, and ex-Governor Curtin. The cank and fife held a camp-fire at Schneider's garden, and by morning the veterans, their wives, and children were dispersing to their homes or getting ready to disperse.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Last Friday the ball team went to Manchester to play the club there. The day was all that could be desired. It was the third great aggregation our boys have met this season, as the Manchesters (so-called) had strengthened their club with four players from Norvell, and Kemp from Chelsea; Vanduyn, Conklin and Freeman being the only resident players. It proved largely a pitcher's game, but few hits being made on either side, the errors of our boys being more costly than those of the other club. It was an intensely interesting game from first to last, and though our boys were defeated, they have reason to be proud of their playing. Everything passed off pleasantly, though as usual, Martty made himself decidedly conspicuous; while only acting as scorer, one would think he was captain of the nine as well as umpire. We affix a summary of the game:

Innings	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Manchester	0	2	0	0	0	0	2	0	3—7
Clinton	2	0	1	0	1	0	0	0	0—4

Time of game, 2 hours. Umpire—Brown, of Hastings.

The reception given Friday evening last, by the Methodist society to their new pastor Rev. A. W. Stalker and his esteemed wife, proved a very cordial one. The parsonage not being fully settled it was held at the church. A large number were present and all expressed themselves highly pleased.

POWER TO FORGIVE SINS. MATT. IX, 1-8.

NOTES.—"Crossed over."—To the west side.—"His own city."—Capernaum. It was a large city, and had an to important rabbinical school.—"The palsy."—Some form of paralysis, it is not clear what.—"On a bed."—A framed stretcher, perhaps, or more likely only a rug, or pallet.—"Seeing their faith."—Of the bearers and the sick man. They had been so earnest as to break through the tiling of the roof.—"Son."—A term of endearment, not implying youth.—"Thy sins are forgiven.—It is possible that his sins had caused his disease. It is more likely that the man had some sense of his sins, and that Christ first spoke of them for the purpose of arousing the attention of the scribes, and enforcing his divine claims, also showing that forgiveness of sin was more important than healing the body.—"Certain of the scribes."—They were watching him together in hostile temper, because he taught religion in a different style from what they did.—"Blasphemeth."—In arrogating God's prerogative of forgiving sin. It did look like blasphemy. If he had no special commission from God, it was blasphemy. Yet they might, if they had not been seeking to find an offense, have put a better construction on his words.—"Wherefore think ye evil."—That is, of me.—"Whether is easier to say," etc.—That is, if I can do one, why not the other? You are forced to admit that I can heal the body; and will you not allow that one can do the other?—"Power on earth." Right, authority; whether original or delegated is not stated.—"Take up thy bed."—Whether a frame or a rug, it could be put under the arm and carried off.—"They were afraid."—Not a fear of danger, but a reverent fear of God.—"Had given such power to men."—They did not fully understand Chirst's divine nature, but regarded him as acting by delegated power.

INSTRUCTION.—After rest work again. Vacations are brief, and work is the rule. After rest we can work all the harder.

Christ began his work at home in his own city. There most of his mighty works were done. It made no difference if they did not appreciate him: he worked good just the same. You do not need to go where you are not known to take active part in Christian service.

One's own faith is good, but it is well to have it reinforced by the faith of others. Here was the co-operative faith of the sick man and his friends. Jesus saw "their faith." It is when several "agree" in asking a blessing that Jesus promises to give it. If you wish a friend converted why not let several unite to pray and labor in faith for him?

They asked for her healing and he gave forgiveness. Prayer may be readily answered when something else is given than is asked for. It may be something a great deal better, as in this case, and perhaps the very thing asked for may be given by and by.

The gift of forgiveness includes all other gifts. It is the greatest of all gifts. It is a mistake to be anxious for earthly things, for health, or prosperity, when all we really need is the favor of God. Yet people labor and pray for things of this world and neglect really to care for the vastly more important forgiveness. Jesus meant to indicate what is the relative importance of his gifts.

Forgiveness is the restoration of God's favor after it has been forfeited. It embraces, in part, the remission of penalty, but still more the restoration of love and favor.

It is very mean to be always thinking evil of folks. Jesus rebuked this carping spirit of people who take delight in judging their neighbors.

Because Jesus did not think and talk on religion just as the scribes did, they watched him to catch him in something wrong, that they might injure him. They interpreted the Scriptures in one way, by the letter and the ceremony. Jesus interpreted it in another, by the spirit and the heart. They would not endure his differing from them, and so, at last, they killed him. That is the essence of religious persecution. Jesus own rule was, "Forbid him not."

Only God can forgive sins. If Jesus forgave sins Jesus is divine.

The forgiveness of sins is the greatest of all deeds. Healing the sick is nothing to forgiving sins. And yet to most a miracle of healing is vastly greater than the gift of forgivness, and so it seemed to the Jews.

TECUMSEH THURSDAY, OCT. 14, 1886.

How do you like the fall styles of ladies hats?

The Presidents trip is literally a triumphal journey.

Civil service reform is engaged President Cleveland and civil service reform will elect his successor.

"What are the causes of loss of memory?" is discussed by a medical journal. Ha! we don't know all the causes but one term as director of the Pacific Railroad seems to knock the memory of an able-bodied man sooner than anything else.

The old blue laws of Connecticut are being dusted off, and in many instances put into immediate effect. One of them absolutely forbids a man kissing his wife, on Christmas day. They say nothing about kissing other people's wives.

President Cleveland has lived near the falls of Niagara most of his life and is therefore familiar with that stupendous phenomenon. During his present trip he will have an opportunity to see that other amazing spectacle, the rise in the price of coal.—Chicago News.

The labor unions of Chicago want President Cleveland to visit certain avenues in that city and see the thousands of places where the poor people sleep in basements and live on what rich people call garbage. And in this connection it would be the proper thing to show him the low groggeries where many of these poor people spend their money for rum instead of buying something better than "garbage" for their families to eat.

The wife of Senator Davis, of Minnesota, is probably destined to create a sensation in Washington this winter. Unless run or beaten hard, she is quite able to hold her own with the "sussiety" at the capital in the matter of beauty; and her husband's wealth, though somewhat short of what the Pacific slopers regard as affluence, is quite sufficient to enable her to make respectable appearance. She has been branded, however, by the ladies of St. Paul as a women who actually earned her living before marriage and did it in the eminently disreputable business of making other women's dresses. How far "sussiety" in Washington will be prepared to overlook this heinous fact is a problem. It has condoned almost everything in the way of corruption and immorality, but it has never been fully put to the test in the matter of association with people who have been contaminated by toil.—Detroit Free Press.

Our good president is crushed again. The knowledgeous New York Sun did it and the Republican associated press disseminated the crusher. Mr. Cleveland is accused of having learned some historical facts about Indianapolis from Appleton's Cyclopaedia. This is the most serious accusation against a public man since the days when a slanderous story writer said G. Washington cut down a cherry tree. Now it was natural for Mr. Cleveland to consult that particular article referred to because he wanted the bedrock, yard-wide—truth, and happened to know that Mr. Dana, the putative father, was the only person who knew the actual history of Indianapolis. He discovered it long ago and bottled it up in the Cyclopaedia. No other man, woman or child is supposed to know where Indianapolis came from. Popular superstition has it that the Indians whittled it out of hickory and set it down alongside of the White River. This is a very reasonable story because the people out there are mighty white by nature and regular old Hickory Democrats. Still the bold, raw and bleeding fact remains that the President consulted the cyclopaedia instead of a last year's almanac. For this crime he must take a Sun bath and Dana and the Associated Press will use the razor. This whole thing may be an advertising scheme, but hardly so. The Messrs. Appleton are probably so darned put out that they will break up of their stereotype plates, heave em over in the rubbish and shut up shop. The heathenish, outrageous Mr. Cleveland! Who would have supposed that he would be guilty of such awfulness? Not one among sixty millions idolizing freemen, not one. Crushed!

THE HUDSON MURDER.

The brief notice in our last week's issue of the finding of a dead body therein only told a small part of the story. We gather additional particulars from last week's Gazette, which leaves no doubt that a foul murder was committed.

WHO IS HE?

The coroner's inquest revealed the very reasonable doubt that the man taken from the fire, was the stranger who had reached the village, on the evening preceding the morning day, and applied for a job on the railroad. Mr. Crow, foreman of one of the gangs, stated that he had given the man to work, and he was to have reported Tuesday morning, and that he failed to appear at the time designated. Rodney Wright testified that he came to his hotel and asked for a room; but when he returned, about 10:30 o'clock, in a state of intoxication, he refunded the money and refused to give him a bed. Prior to Rodney House he went to Lane's livery and enquired for the down in the barn, but he was ordered out by Orcenlous Spalding, who marched him to Market street and turned him southward. Two boys—Pat Moriarty and Will Cosgrove followed him to Main street, near Lawrence's grocery. That was the last time that he was seen alive. He had been in the saloons all the evening, treating and talking a good deal and was much the worse for liquor. He is reported as saying that his name was Hall, that he was an old soldier and a pensioner, and had "plenty of money to pay his way with." He displayed several pieces of silver in the saloons.

STARTLING DEVELOPMENTS.

The post mortem examination, conducted by Drs. Nix and Dodge, disclosed some startling facts. A large hole, made by some blunt instrument, was found in the skull. Clotted blood under the skull and at the base of the brain on the same side as the wound, showed that the injury was sustained before death occurred, or before the body was burned. Both physicians seemed to incline to the opinion that death had resulted from foul play and violence. Other revelations showed such opinions to be well founded. An iron bar that was left in another part of the shed was found near the remains "It fitted in the wound in the skull exactly. Herbert Eaton's testimony showed that a stranger could not have reached the spot where the body lay without great difficulty, as a rack and large pile of slats were between the place and the entrance to the shed. No trace was found of an overcoat which the stranger wore, although pieces of his other clothing were picked up; a few pennies was the only money found. These developments gave a more serious aspect to the case, and prosecutor Morgan and deputy sheriff "Teachout" were summoned to assist in the investigations.

THE CORONERS' VERDICT.

The coroners' jury, consisting of R. A. Beach, D. H. Patterson, H. C. Hanford, S. C. Pease, C. A. Price and Peter Ward, after listening patiently to testimony for three days, reached a verdict "yesterday afternoon, before Justice Carson, deciding that the deceased came to his death from a blow on the head inflicted by a blunt instrument of some kind, at whose hands they were unable to determine. Some of the testimony given was contradictory and calculated to create suspicion, but nothing decisive concerning the perpetrators of the atrocious crime was adduced. The officers, however, have their suspicions, and some arrests may be made before we go to press. The opinion of six men, after such an exhaustive investigation, that a murder has been committed in our village, calls for the promptest and most vigilant service from the officers of the law. If this stranger met his death in the manner surmised, the safety and good name of our village demand that the assassins who did the devilish work be ferreted out and speedily brought to justice. We dislike to think that Hudson harbors men guilty of such a terrible crime; and it may be that no one but the deceased himself was responsible for the tragic termination of his life, which might have occurred as he lay in a drunken stupor. The evidence, however, does not corroborate such a view of the tragedy, but rather points to the terrible thought that a stranger, away from friends and kin, was struck down at midnight in the streets of our peaceful village, thrown into a shed and the building burned to convey the impression that his death was the result of his own carelessness or a decree of fate.

THE LATEST.

James Steward has been arrested for complicity in the murder. It transpires that Steward and two boys met the man in the shed for a night's lodging, and the boys left the scene for home. Steward's story is that he followed and laid down by the man, to wait and rob him, was awakened by the building burning and fled home. Moriarty and Cosgrove, the boys, remained quiet about their part in the transaction for fear of being suspicioned and arrested, but they yielded to the pressure brought to bear by the officers and divulged what they knew about it. Martin Guy was arrested by Hillsdale officers at Prattville yesterday, taken to the Hillsdale jail, and Both men bear very unsavory reputations. Other arrests may follow.

New York Should Be Happy.

ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 7.—The seventh and [illegible] form party puts one in the field at Syracuse—was nominated Tuesday by the National Greenbacks Labor party. Thirteen delegates were present. New York was represented by Dr. Amos Shelton, and out of respect to the large constituency behind him he was made chairman. Mr. Jones proposed the Rev. Dr. Thomas K. Beecher, of Elmira, for secretary of state. Dr. Beecher was nominated unanimously, and a telegram was sent to him at Elmira. No reply has yet been received.

Big Day at Camp Sheridan.

CHICAGO, Oct. 8.—Camp Sheridan had an interesting time Saturday, and there was a fair attendance of spectators. The competitive cavalry drill, participated in by the Cleveland troop and the Milwaukee light Horse squadron, began at 9 o'clock Saturday morning and lasted until 11. Then the foreign officers gave an exhibition drill. The trumpet and bugle corps also contested for prizes. The Milwaukee Light battery then gave a saber drill, and the Laguna Indians gave an exhibition with their trained horses. At 1:30 a monster sham battle was given.

Jay Gould Gets the B. & O. Telegraph.

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—Jay Gould and Norvin Green said Thursday evening that the Western Union has bought the B. & O. Telegraph for $5,000,000 in Western Union stock. They had elected the present B. & O. officers to continue in their places for the present.

The form of purchase of the Baltimore & Ohio is a fifty year lease, but this is virtually a purchase outright. The $5,000,000 W. U. stock at present prices represents $5,950,000 cash.

Yellow Fever at Tampa, Florida.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 8.—Dr. Wall, president of the Tampa, Fla., board of health, has reported to the marine hospital service that yellow fever, has broken out at Tampa, with indications of rapid spread. Surgeon General Hamilton has issued orders for energetic action to prevent the spread of the disease.

FIRES AND OTHER ACCIDENTS.

An express train struck and smashed the buggy driven by Peter Tobias, a wealthy farmer, near Springfield, Ohio, Tuesday. One of the spokes of the vehicle was driven through Tobias' brain.

According to a New York paper, the fire losses in the United States in September amounted to $7,927,000. In September of last year they were $6,500,000. In nine months of the current year the losses by fire reached the enormous aggregate of $68,183,500, being nearly $10,000,000 more than in the corresponding months of 1885.

PART THE FIRST.

THE TRIAL OF EDWARD LAYTON.

CHAPTER I.

A STRANGE DECISION.

This morning, at the central criminal court, Mr. Justice Fenmore resumed the trial of Edward Layton for the willful murder of his wife, Agnes Layton, on the morning of the 26th of March, by the administration of poisonous narcotics in such quantities as to produce death. Extraordinary as was the excitement caused by yesterday's proceedings, the public interest in this mysterious murder was intensified by the strange decision arrived at by the prisoner on this the third day of his trial.

The attorney general, Mr. J. Protheroe, Q. C., and Mr. Standing conducted the case on behalf of the crown.

The widely spread rumor that an episode of a startling character was impending received confirmation immediately upon the entrance of the prisoner in the dock. He presented a careworn appearance, and while the usual formalities were in progress it was observed that he and his counsel (Mr. Bainbridge, Q. C.) were in earnest consultation, and it appeared as if the learned gentleman was endeavoring to overcome some resolution which the prisoner had formed. At the termination of this conversation Mr. Bainbridge, turning to the bench, said:

"I have to claim your lordship's indulgence for a statement which I find it necessary to make. It is in the remembrance of your lordship that on the first day of this trial the prisoner was undefended, being, as it appears, resolutely determined to defend himself. Yesterday morning—that is, upon the second day of the trial—I informed your lordship that the prisoner had been prevailed upon by his friends to intrust his defense to me. Being satisfied in my own mind that nothing would occur to disturb this arrangement—which I venture to say was an advisable one—I did not feel called upon to mention that the prisoner's consent to accept legal aid was very reluctantly given. That this was so, however, is proved by what has since transpired. Both in writing and by word of mouth the prisoner now insists upon conducting his own case, and has distinctly informed me that he will not permit me to act for him. I am empowered to say that his decision is not in any sense personal to myself. It is simply, and regrettably, that he has resolved not to be defended or represented by counsel. In these circumstances I have no option but to place myself in your lordship's hands.

Prisoner—My lord ——

Mr. Justice Fenmore—Silence. Your counsel will speak for you.

Prisoner—My lord, I have no counsel. I am defending myself, and no person shall speak for me.

Mr. Justice Fenmore—Prisoner at the bar, it is my duty to tell you that the decision at which you have arrived is grave and unwise.

Prisoner—Of that, my lord, I am the best judge.

Mr. Justice Fenmore—You may not be. It is scarcely necessary for me to point out to you, a man of intelligence and good education, that there are points in every case, and especially in a case so momentous as this, which an unofficial, or, to speak more correctly, a mind not legally trained, is almost certain to overlook.

Prisoner—I understand your lordship, and I thank you; but if my acquittal of the terrible crime for which I am now being tried is to be brought about by legal technicalities, I shall prefer not to owe my release to those means. I, better than any man here—and so, indeed, the actual murderer be present—know whether I am innocent or guilty, and in the course I have determined to pursue I am acting in what I believe to be my best interests. Your lordship has referred to me as a man of intelligence and good education. These qualifications will sufficiently serve me, but I do not rely upon them alone. I have really had some sort of legal training, and as I assuredly know that I shall conduct my own defense in a manner which will recommend itself to my heart and my conscience, so do I believe that, if I choose to exercise it—and I suppose most men in my position would so choose—I have legal knowledge sufficient for my needs. The learned counsel who has addressed your lordship has put the matter most fairly. My consent that he should defend me was reluctantly given, and I reserved to myself the right to withdraw it. He has mentioned that this withdrawal is not personal to himself. It is true. To him, above all others, would I intrust my defense, were it not that I have cogent and imperative reasons for trusting no man. I shall not displease one so earnest and high minded as he when I state that he once gave me his friendship, and that I felt honored by it. Your lordship will pardon me for this statement, the admission of which I feel to be unusual in such a case. I have made it only for the purpose of emphasizing his correct view. My lord, I stand upon my rights. I will conduct my own defense."

The trial was then proceeded with.

CHAPTER II.

THE EVIDENCE OF JAMES MOORHOUSE, COACHMAN.

The first witness called was James Moorhouse, whose examination was looked forward to with great interest, as likely to tell heavily either for or against the prisoner. He is a sturdy man, of middle age, with an expression of intense earnestness in his face, and although he gave his evidence in a perfectly straightforward manner, it was apparent that his sympathies were with the prisoner.

The Attorney General—Your name is James Moorhouse?

Witness—It is, sir.

The Attorney General—Were you in the prisoner's employment?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—In what capacity?

Witness—As his coachman.

The Attorney General—For how long were you so employed?

Witness—For a matter of three years.

The Attorney General—Are you a teetotaler?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—During the three years you worked for the prisoner were you in the habit of driving him out regularly?

Witness—Yes, sir; pretty nearly every day.

The Attorney General—Were you the only coachman in the establishment?

Witness—I was, sir.

The Attorney General—Being in his employment so long you are, I suppose, perfectly familiar with his figure?

Witness—I am, sir; without hearing his voice, I should know him in the dark.

The Attorney General—You are sure of that?

Witness—Quite sure, sir.

The Attorney General—Is your eyesight very strong? I ask because it is a longish way.

The Attorney General—You have been in the habit of driving the prisoner often at night?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—And your eyes, therefore, have got trained to his figure, as it were?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—You have had to look out for him on dark nights from a distance?

Witness—I have had to do that, sir.

The Attorney General—When the people were coming out of the theatre, for instance?

Witness—Yes, sir, and at other places as well.

The Attorney General—Therefore, it is not likely you could be mistaken in him?

Witness—It is hardly possible, sir.

The Attorney General—You remember the night of the 25th of March?

Witness—Yes, sir, and the day too.

The Attorney General—Why do you include the day in your answer?

Witness—Because it was the hardest day's work I have done for many a year.

The Attorney General—The hardest day's driving, do you mean?

Witness—Yes, sir. I was on the box from H o'clock in the morning till an hour past midnight.

The Attorney General—Driving your master, the prisoner?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—And no other person?

Witness—Not till evening, sir. It was about——

The Attorney General—We will come to the particulars presently. You were not driving all the time?

Witness—No, sir; the horses couldn't have stood it.

The Attorney General—Do you mean that there were stoppages?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—Did the prisoner usually work his horses so hard?

Witness—Not at all, sir. He was a good master to man and beast.

The Attorney General—Why do you look so frequently at the prisoner?

Witness—I can't tell you, sir, except that I shouldn't like to say anything to hurt him.

The Attorney General—But you are here to speak the truth.

Witness—I intend to speak it, sir.

The Attorney General—For reasons which you have given, your remembrance of what occurred on the 25th of March is likely to be exceptionally faithful?

Witness—For those and other reasons, sir.

The Attorney General—Now, commence on the morning of that day. What were your first instructions?

Witness—To be ready with the carriage at 11 o'clock.

The Attorney General—You were ready?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—In what way did you fix the time? By guessing?

Witness—By my watch, sir—the best timekeeper in London.

The Attorney General—At 11 o'clock, then, you were on the box, waiting for your master?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—He came out to you?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—Did he tell you immediately where to drive to?

Witness—Not immediately, sir. He stood with his hand on the carriage door, and seemed to be considering.

The Attorney General—Did he remain long considering?

Witness—For three or four minutes, sir, which seemed a longish time.

The Attorney General—And then?

Witness—Then he told me to drive to Finchley.

The Attorney General—What address did he give you?

Witness—None in particular, sir. He said, "Drive to Finchley, on the road to High Barnet. I will tell you when to stop."

The Attorney General—Well?

Witness—I drove as directed, and when we were about midway between Finchley and High Barnet he called to me to stop.

The Attorney General—Were you then at the gate, or in front of any house?

Witness—No, sir. We were on the high road and there was no house within twenty yards of us.

The Attorney General—Are you familiar with the locality?

Witness—No, sir. I am not.

The Attorney General—You had never driven your master there before?

Witness—Never, sir.

The Attorney General—Would you be able to mark the point of stoppage on a map of the road between Finchley and High Barnet?

Witness—I will try, sir, but I should not like to be positive.

(A map was here handed to the witness, who, after a careful study of it, made a mark upon it with a pencil.)

The Attorney General—You will not swear that this is the exact spot?

Witness—No, sir.

The Attorney General—But to the best of your knowledge it is?

Witness—Yes, sir, to the best of my knowledge.

The Attorney General—The prisoner called to you to stop. What then?

Witness—I drew up immediately and he got out.

The Attorney General—What were his next instructions?

Witness—He told me to wait for him and to turn the horses' heads.

The Attorney General—Toward London?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—Did he say how long he would be away?

Witness—About five or ten minutes, he said.

The Attorney General—In point of fact, how long was it before he returned?

Witness—Thirty-two minutes by my watch.

The Attorney General—You always time your job?

Witness—Yes, sir, always; it's a habit.

The Attorney General—Did he make any apology upon his return about his being away longer than he expected?

Witness—No, sir; he seemed to be occupied with something.

The Attorney General—Occupied in thinking of something?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—When he left you, in what direction did he go?

Witness—He walked on toward High Barnet till he came to a bend in the road. He went round that, and I lost sight of him.

The Attorney General—Did he return the same way?

Witness—No, sir; he startled me a bit.

The Attorney General—How?

Witness—I was looking out for him in the direction he had taken, when I suddenly heard him speak at my elbow.

The Attorney General—How do you account for it?

Witness—He must have taken a short cut back across some fields. If I had not been looking for him in the road, and there was a hedge, more than man high, on the side he came back to me.

The Attorney General—What did you do when he rejoined you?

Witness—I turned to start.

The Attorney General—Did he tell you immediately where to drive to?

Witness—No, sir. He stood considering, just as he did when we first set out.

The Attorney General—And then?

Witness—He told me to drive back the way we had come, but not to drive too quickly.

The Attorney General—You did so?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—Where did you next stop?

Witness—Midway between Finchley and Church End.

The Attorney General—At a house?

Witness—No, sir; at a part of the road where there were no houses.

The Attorney General—He called to you to stop?

Witness—Yes, sir. He got out, and said, "Moorhouse, meet me here in about an hour—an hour and a quarter." I said, "Yes, sir," and I asked him whether I should hitch the horses at an inn we had passed half a mile down the road. He did not answer me, but walked quickly away.

The Attorney General—Can you say why he did not answer you?

Witness—No, sir, except that he did not hear me.

The Attorney General—You spoke distinctly?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—Have you observed, at any time during your employment, that he was at all deaf?

Witness—No, sir; that he seemed, the whole of that day, to have something on his mind which kept him from thinking of anything else, or attending to it.

The Attorney General—After he walked quickly away, what did you do?

Witness—As I had more than an hour to spare I drove back to the inn I spoke of and baited my horses, and had a bite of bread and cheese myself.

The Attorney General—Anything to drink?

Witness—A bottle of ginger beer.

The Attorney General—Timing yourself as usual, were you back on the spot you left the prisoner at the end of the hour and a quarter?

Witness—To the minute.

The Attorney General—Was he waiting for you?

Witness—No, sir. I saw nothing of him for another two hours.

The Attorney General—Did he return by the road he quitted you?

Witness—No, sir. He came back another way.

The Attorney General—As before?

Witness—Yes, sir; as before.

The Attorney General—What time was it then?

Witness—Seven o'clock.

The Attorney General—Was it getting dark?

Witness—It was already dark, sir, and beginning to drizzle.

The Attorney General—What were the next instructions?

Witness—To drive to the Metropolitan Music hall, Edgeware road.

The Attorney General—You drove there?

Witness—Yes, sir, and my master got out.

The Attorney General—Saying what?

Witness—Moorhouse, he said: "I don't know how long I shall remain here. It may be an hour or only a few minutes. Keep near."

The Attorney General—You obeyed his instructions?

Witness—Yes, sir. I kept within hail, and my master came out at half-past nine.

The Attorney General—Alone?

Witness—No, sir. He was accompanied by a man.

The Attorney General—A young or an old man?

Witness—I can't say.

The Attorney General—But you saw him?

Witness—Only his back. They walked away from the carriage.

The Attorney General—There is generally something in the gait of a man which, within limits, denotes his age—that is to say, as whether he is young or old. Cannot you be guided by that fact?

Witness—No, sir. I paid no particular attention to him. It was my master I was chiefly observing.

The Attorney General—You have not the slightest idea as to the age of the man who came out of the Metropolitan Music hall with the prisoner.

Witness—Not the slightest, sir.

The Attorney General—Did you observe nothing particular as to his dress? Was there any peculiarity about it?

Witness—I observed nothing particular about him. Whatever I might say of the man, paying such little attention to him, wouldn't be worth much.

The Attorney General—I recognize that you are giving your evidence in a very fair manner, and if I press you upon any point it is for the purpose of assisting your memory. You recollect that the prisoner on that night wore a coat of a distinct pattern?

Witness—Yes, sir. He had on an ulster with a Scotch check, which couldn't be mistaken.

The Attorney General—What was it lined with?

Witness—With blue cloth.

The Attorney General—He wore this ulster when he entered the music hall?

Witness—Yes, sir; and when he came out of the music hall.

The Attorney General—It is this which makes me think it likely you might have observed some distinguishing mark in the dress of the man who came out with him?

Witness—I have nothing in my mind, sir, respecting his dress.

The Attorney General—Very well. I will no longer press it. As to his height?

Witness—As well as I can remember, he was about the same height as my master.

The Attorney General—Did you notice the color of his hair, or whether it was long or short?

Witness—No, sir.

The Attorney General—If it had been long white hair, you would most likely have noticed it?

Witness—In that case, yes, sir.

The Attorney General—We may assume, then, that he had not long white hair?

Witness—I think I am safe in saying that much.

The Attorney General—Or white hair at all?

Witness—I shouldn't like to commit myself there, sir. If his hair had been white and short, I don't think it would have struck me.

The Attorney General—Did he and the prisoner walk out of sight?

Witness—No, sir. They walked to the corner of a street, and stood there talking for a little while—I should say for fifteen or twenty minutes. Then the man went away, down the street, which hid him from me, and my master returned to me.

The Attorney General—While they were talking their backs were still turned to you?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—Was their anything observable in their manner of conversing? Were they calm? Did they remain perfectly still?

Witness—No, sir. My master was calm enough, but his companion appeared to be very excited. My master seemed to be trying to persuade him to do something.

The Attorney General—From that attitude, should you have assumed that his mind was preyed upon?

Witness—I can't possibly say, sir.

The Attorney General—Well, then, the man went away, and the prisoner returned to you. What was the next thing done?

Witness—To drive to Bloomsbury square, and stop where he directed me.

The Attorney General—You did so?

Witness—Yes, sir. When we reached the square in Queen street he pulled the check strung, and I stopped there. He got out of the carriage and looked about him.

The Attorney General—As if in search of some person?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—Did he make any remark to you?

Witness—He said, "If you see a young lady in a gray cloak pass by, you can tell her I am in the square."

The Attorney General—Did he remain with you after that?

Witness—No, sir; he walked right round the square. When he came up to me he asked if I had seen a young lady dressed as he had described. I told him no, I hadn't, and he bade me keep a sharp look out, and left me again."

The Attorney General—To walk round the square again?

Witness—Yes, sir. He walked round three or four times, I should say, and every time he came up to me he asked me if I was sure I had not seen the young lady; if I was sure she had not passed me. I gave him the same answer as I did before, and he left me again. He could not have been more than half way round when I saw a lady in a gray cloak coming my way. She was walking hurriedly, and looking about her. I advanced to speak to her, but she started back the moment I made a step toward her, and ran to the other side of the road, and crossed into the square at a distance from me. I should have gone up to her had I not been afraid to leave my horses, but seeing that she began to walk round the square in the opposite direction my master had taken, I was satisfied that they must meet.

The Attorney General—In point of fact, did they meet? Relate what you saw that bears upon it.

Witness—A little while afterward I saw them together, talking to each other. They did not walk on the pavement close to the houses, but on the side, close to the railings. I don't know how many times they made the circle of the square, but they must have been away about twenty minutes or so. Then they came up to me together, and my master opened the door of the carriage, and the lady got in. When she was inside he said to me that there was no occasion for me to mention what I had seen, or that he had spoken to me about the lady.

The Attorney General—All this time was it raining?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—Did they have umbrellas?

Witness—Neither, of them, sir.

The Attorney General—They must have got wet?

Witness—They couldn't help getting wet.

The Attorney General—Did they seem to mind it?

Witness—They didn't say anything about it.

The Attorney General—While they were walking round the square, did they meet any persons?

Witness—A few passed them and they got out of their way, it seemed to me.

The Attorney General—As if they desired to avoid observation?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—That would be a reasonable construction to put upon the circumstance of their walking, during their conversation, on the least frequented side of the square, near the railings?

Witness—Yes, I think so.

The Attorney General—Although the neighborhood is a fairly busy one during the day, are there many people passing through Bloomsbury square at night?

Witness—Not many, I should say.

The Attorney General—The square is not very well lighted up?

Witness—Not very.

The Attorney General—Did you see a policeman while you were waiting?

Witness—One, and only once.

The Attorney General—Did he speak to you?

Witness—No, sir.

The Attorney General—He passed on through the square?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—Reference has been made to an ulster of a peculiar pattern which the prisoner was in the habit of wearing. You said it was an ulster which could not be mistaken. Are you certain of that?

Witness—Quite certain.

The Attorney General—Is it within your recollection how long the prisoner has worn this ulster?

Witness—He had it made last year.

The Attorney General—Would you recognize it if you saw it?

Witness—Oh, yes.

The Attorney General—Is this it? (Ulster produced.)

Witness—Yes, that is it.

The Attorney General—You swear to it?

Witness—I do.

The Attorney General—You have said that the prisoner came out of his house wearing this ulster. Now, on the occasion you have described, when the prisoner left his carriage and returned to it, was this ulster ever off his back?

Witness—He wore it all the time.

The Attorney General—You are positive he did not at any time leave you with this ulster on, and return wearing another?

Witness—I am positive of it.

The Attorney General—After the lady got into the carriage, and the prisoner told you there was no occasion for you to mention what you had seen, or that he had spoken to you about the lady, what did he do?

Witness—He told me to drive to Prevost's restaurant, in Church street, Soho, and then he got into the carriage.

The Attorney General—At any time during the night did you see the lady's face?

Witness—Not at any time.

The Attorney General—Were you familiar with Prevost's restaurant?

Witness—No, I had never been there, and I was in doubt where Church street was. I had to inquire my way.

The Attorney General—Could not the prisoner tell you?

Witness—I asked him, and he said he could not direct me.

(Could the restaurant?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—And then?

Witness—My master and the lady entered the restaurant.

The Attorney General—What did your master say to you?

Witness—He told me to wait near the door.

The Attorney General—Did you know what time it was when you drew up at the restaurant?

Witness—It was 10.50.

The Attorney General—How long were you kept waiting?

Witness—Nearly an hour and five minutes.

The Attorney General—That will bring it to five minutes to 12?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—Did the prisoner then come from the restaurant?

Witness—Yes, accompanied by the lady.

The Attorney General—It was still raining?

Witness—Raining hard now.

The Attorney General—Did he appear flurried? Was he excited?

Witness—His movements were very hurried, which I thought was due to the rain, and perhaps to his having had a little too much wine. He opened the door of the carriage quickly, and the lady jumped in, to avoid the rain, I suppose. My master got in quickly after her.

The Attorney General—But he gave you instructions?

Witness—All he said was, "Home!"

The Attorney General—Calmly?

Witness—No, sir. Although he only said one word, I noticed that his voice was thick. It was because of that I suspected he had taken a little too much wine.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

THE LAST WILL OF DAVID HATCH.

As this case is one of very genera interest, particularly in the northern part of the county, where the parties interested reside, and is also of interest because of the legal questions involved, we have taken the trouble to condense from the exhaustive decision of Judge Cheever, rendered the 30 inst, a more full and complete statement of the evidence and decision than that published by us in the issue of the HERALD, and think we have omitted nothing necessary to a correct understanding of the evidence and decision.

Judge Geddes says: "The testator, David Hatch, at the time of his decease, on the 21st of March 1887, was the owner of some 210 acres of land in Macon. He had two sons, James and Samuel, and one daughter, Jeannette Hastings. It was supposed by both sons that he left a will, but after diligent search and failing to find it, Samuel Hatch filed a petition in this court, alleging the death, and that deceased left a last will—That said will was duly made in writing and executed by said David Hatch, on or about the first day of August 1885, at Tecumseh, and was attested and subscribed in the presence of the testator and at his request by C. A. and S. C. Stacy, two competent witnesses and was, as he believed in existence at death of testator. The petition then sets forth in detail the provisions of said alleged lost will, and adds, "That petitioner has made the most diligent and careful search for said will in all places where it might possibly be left, and particularly among the papers and effects of said deceased, and that he has been unable to find the same and believes said will to be lost and praying for its probate. James Hatch in person and by L. H. Salsbury, his counsel, come into court and contest the allowance of the will on the following grounds.

1st, Denies that there ever was such a will as the one propounded.

2d, That deceased was at time such will purports to have been made mentally incompetent to make and execute a last will.

3d, If there was any such will made, it was made by reason of undue influence over the deceased by proponent and others acting for him.

Judge C. A. Stacy, a witness in behalf of proponent testifies that he knew David Hatch for many years. That on the 31st day of July 1885, he drew a will for him.

That when deceased told him how he wished it drawn, he took the county altas, and with testator looked over the map of Macon and having ascertained the descriptions, drew the will and read it over to Mr. Hatch who said it was right, and signed it. That he and his son Scovel then signed it as witnesses in the presence of testator and at his request. Judge Stacy then goes on to state the contents of the will, with wonderful particularity, stating them precisely as stated in the citation for probate. That he should have remembered for so long a time the contents of a will drawn by him and in which he had no personal interest, is of course somewhat remarkable. But he testifies that when he had the map of Macon open before him at the time will was drawn, Mr. Hatch told him what lands he desired to give Samuel, and thereupon he marked upon each of said descriptions S. H., and on the lands he wished to give James, J. H. That this was the second time he had ever done this, and he remembered it distinctly. He also testifies that testator told him he had helped James and Jeanette but had not helped Sam and that he thought he would be doing justice and right by making division as specified in will.

Scovel C. Stacy testifies that he witnessed will of David Hatch in his father's office in summer of 1885, but caold not give the date.

The proponent then introduced testimony tending to prove that testator retained his mental capacity to transact his ordinary business until Nov. 11, 1886 and that from that time to his death he was mentally incompetent to do business or make a will.

He then offered to show by declaration of the testator, made to different parties at different times, the continued existence of the will, up to Nov. 11, 1886, when the proponent claims he became mentally incompetent to do business, and of course incompetent to make or revoke a will already made. This testimony was objected to by contestants counsel as incompetent, he claiming that the declarations of the testator are not admissible to prove the existence or contents of a will. The testimony was received subject to be striken out on the argument or the final disposition of the case, and on the decision of the question whether these declarations of the testator and of the facts and circumstances surrounding the testator from the time of making his will to the date of his death were or were not properly admitted as evidence, or having must as it seems to me govern the decision of this case.

Reviewing the testimony briefly, Judge Stacy testified: "The last time I saw David Hatch was in the latter part of August or first part of September, 1885, in my own office in the Village of Tecumseh, —more than a year after the will was drawn. I asked him how he was. He said his health was poor—wasn't able to get about as he used to, but was feeling mental if all right because he had got his matters settled, felt as though he had nothing to worry about. He told me Samuel had moved back on the place. That he had behaved very since I had made the will and that if it had not been made he did'nt know what he should do in his condition. He also spoke of Mrs. Samuel Hatch's kindness. Said she took all care and trouble from him. That I had made his will for him and it was fixed just to suit him."

The testimony of Bessie J. Little, who must be considered a disinterested witness, and who testified with very great apparent candor and intelligence, and the testimony of Samuel Hatch and his wife, who are of course interested parties, and whose testimony should be scanned very carefully, but which is uncontradicted in any material point seems conclusive, that while Samuel Hatch was living in Detroit, the testator came there and stated both to Bessie J. Little and Samuel Hatch—to the latter, while on the cars—that he had made his will and had given Sam the homestead and two other pieces. In short stated the contents of the will precisely as Judge Stacy swears they were. That he said to them he wanted them to come back on the farm and that in pursuance of the talk there had, Samuel and his family moved back on the farm, the testator adding as an additional inducement at there would never have to move again—that he had made his will and the home farm was to be theirs. That after they had come on the farm testator told them to go on and fix up or repair the house as they wished as it was to be theirs. That there was, after Sam and his family come to Macon no change in the condition of things—that the arrangement for Sam and his family to come upon the farm, rent or occupy it and take care of the old gentleman remained unchanged during all the old gentleman's life. That his declaration of approbation and satisfaction with his will were made down to within four days of the time when he was stricken down and deprived of mental capacity, and that there was no change in the conditions or circumstances, from the date of his latest declarations of satisfaction or approval of his will, to the time when it is claimed he lost his mind, which would have been at all likely to induce him to revoke a will (in case one had been made and it had not then been revoked.)" The preponderance of testimony is to the effect that testator had not sufficient mental capacity to make or revoke a will after Nov. 11th 1886.

One of contestant's witnesses, Granville Mills, a man of the highest character, swears to having had a conversation with Mr. Hatch in October, 1884, in which testator consulted with him as to his opinion as to the value of his lands and in regard to the making of his will, and spoke of the injustice and inequality of certain other wills, named, and that he thought they were unequal and unjust. I have carefully examined this testimony and am unable to see that it conflicts materially with the testimony on behalf of proponents, and besides the conversation occurred nearly ten months prior to the date Judge Stacy swears he drew the will. What Mr. Hatch's ideas of equality were, it is difficult to determine; but it is in evidence that he at different times stated that he had helped James and Jeannette but had not helped Sam. It is no uncommon thing for men to change their minds in regard to their legacies and bequests, and it is within the experience of every lawyer that men frequently alter, change and modify their wills—often having them rewritten and the objects of their bounty changed entirely. But Mr. Mills also testifies to another conversation had with testator, only a short time before the alleged conversation sworn to by Samuel and his wife, wherein the testator pointed out the lands on the map, in which he, the testator, told Mills he should let the law divide his property. Mr. Mills testifies that he talked with Mr. Hatch, with the purpose of having him will some of his property to a step son, a brother of Mills' wife. Whether Mr. Hatch understood the full force of his remarks to Mr. Mills, about letting the law divide his property, they certainly contradicted his repeated statements and declarations made to Judge Stacy, in September 1886 and to Dr. Morden and Chas. Burridge in the same month, and to Bessie J. Little, Melancthon Smith and others corobolating with more or less minuteness and particularity, the testimony of Judge Stacy as to the contents of the will, and of his continued approval and satisfaction therewith. But this court is not called upon to reconcile or harmonize contradictory statements made by testator. He may at the time of his last conversation with Mills have concluded to revoke it, or forgotten that he had made a will. The preponderance of testimony is that the will was made and that testator recognized having made it and its existence up to some few days before losing his mind, and until after the conversation testified to by Mr. Mills, so that it seems very clear to me that if the declarations of testator, as sworn to by witnesses are admissible, the presumption of revocation rebutted,—there being no change in circumstances, relation or condition of things from Nov. 7, 1886 when Samuel swears and the eleventh of November, when he lost his mind.

Before referring to the authorities which as it seems to me, sustain my views upon the question of the admissibility of the evidence, I will say to the counsel, that with the justice or injustice, the equality or inequality of the will of David Hatch this court has no concern any farther than as it bears upon proponent, the principal beneficiary, named. It is not within the province of this court to reform or change a will. It must stand or fall as made by testator. If the proof satisfies the court that the will was made—that its contents were as stated in petition for its probate and that it was unrevoked at testators decease, the court has no discretion but must allow it, no matter if he feels it was grossly unjust. While on the other hand if not convinced by the proof that the will was made, or that it existed up to death of testator, the court cannot allow it, although it be never so just or equal in its provisions. The testimony of the witnesses in behalf of both proponent and contestant has been given with the utmost candor, and I find very little conflict therein so far as material issues are concerned.

Now as to the legal questions involved in this hearing. Mr. Salsbury, counsel for contestant, in arguing the case, withdrew so much of his contest as denied the competency of testator to make a will and also the charge that it was made under undue influence, thus removing the issue to the question.

1st, Whether there was such a will made, 2d, If made and left with testator has the presumption of revocation been rebutted?

The council for both proponent and contestant having made exhaustive and very able arguments in support of their respective views, I have deemed it proper in a matter of so much importance, involving issues reaching far beyond the money value of the estate in question, to point out, as clearly and definitely as practicable, not only my understanding of the testimony, but the authorities, which it seems to me warrant the conclusion to which I have arrived. I am aware any ruling or decision of this court can have no weight or effect in the appellate court. The testimony that may be given there, may be so entirely different from what it has been here, that that court would be wholly unwarranted in sustaining the decision of this court. But the counsel who so ably conducted and argued the case in this court, knowing that by making the merest formal proof here, the case could at once be taken to the appellate court and there tried as a case of this character should be tried, before a jury, chose to spend some two weeks of valuable time in the trial and argument of the case here. Under these circumstances, it has seemed to me courtesy, if nothing more, demands that I take the course I have and write out my views and references at length.

In Redfield on wills, p. 348, Note 14, I find the doctrine laid down, that "The practice in the American Courts, of receiving the parol evidence of the contents of a lost will, seems to be universal and without question, notwithstanding the stringent requirments in regard to the mode of executing wills." Citing a large number of authorities.

In Stephens Dig. of the law of evidence Art. 29, p. 84.

There can be no doubt that the contents of a lost will may be proven by parol, or that the declarations of the deceased testator, as to its contents, are relevant whether made before or after the loss of the will.

Under the law, as I understand it, Judge Stacy's testimony is sufficient to establish the fact that a will was made July 31st, 1885, and that its contents were as stated by him. His testimony is corroborated by testators acts and declarations, all admissable under the decision in Sugden vs St. Leonards, L. R. P. D. 154

The question of the admissability of declarations made by testator, subsequent to the making of the will, has been much obscured by failures to distinguish between the different circumstances, under which, as well as the different purposes for which such declarations are offered in evidence. Thus, the Statutory provision Sec. 5 793, of Howell's Statutes. "No will nor any part thereof shall be revoked, unless by burning, tearing, cancelling or obliterating the same with the intention of revoking it by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his direction," effectually excludes all testator's declarations that he had revoked it, in all cases where the will is produced without having been torn canceled or obliterated. But where the will presented is torn, cut or otherwise mutilated, and there is no positive evidence showing by whom it was done, or if done by the testator, whether with the intention of revoking it or accidentally, the declarations of the testator are admissible as aids to a determination of this question. Sumyer vs Smith 8th, Mich. R. 411.

And when a will is contested on the ground that it has been revoked by a later will and testimony has been given as to the existence of a later will, declarations made by the testator shortly before his decease, indicating that his mind had undergone a change in regard to the disposal of his property, since the first will made 17 years before, and that he had in fact altered the disposition of his property are admissible as tending to corroborate such testimony. Hopes Appeal 48 Mich. 518.

So where a will, the prior existence whereof is established, is missing and the questions are (1) Whether the testator had destroyed the will and if so (2) whether with intent to revoke, declarations of the decedent manifesting dissatisfaction with the dispositions of the will, though not made at the time of the alleged acts of spoliation are competent evidence, bearing both upon the destruction of the will by the decedent, and upon the intent of his acts. And free intelligent and distinct expressions manifesting approbation or disapprobation of the will would have furnished more or less aid to the jury in their endeavors to ascertain whether in fact he did or did not tear the will, and whether if he did so it was done with intent to revoke. Harring vs. Allen 25th, Mich. 505,

These Michigan cases seem to me conclusively to establish the admissibility of the declarations of the testator, upon the issue [illegible] will has been revoked by the testator. But as this conclusion is denied by contestants and a great number of decisions of other courts have been cited it is proper to consider whether or not the conclusion is supported by other authority.

In Walkley vs. King 12 Eng. C. L. decided in 1864 the sylabus is "Where a will and Codicil the drafts of which were produced, were proved to have been left by the affirmed with the testator, after execution, but were not forthcoming after his death, declarations of the testator to certain members of his family, drawn in a few days before his death, expressive of his satisfaction of having settled his affairs and intimating that his will was left with his attorney, were held to have been properly admitted to rebut the presumption that the will and codicil had been destroyed animo revocandi.

In Keen vs. Keen 7, Moaks Eng. R. 341, which was an action for the probate of a lost will, the issue being whether it had been revoked or not, Sir J. Hanner says, "Now I think there can be no doubt that while on the one hand evidence of statements made by a testator, subsequent to the execution of a will, that he intends to act in conformity with the disposition contained in the will is clearly admissible, it necessarily follows that other statements made by a testator to a contrary effect must also be admissible."

A very strong English case and one having some analogy to the case at bar, and not cited by counsel is that of Sprigge vs. Sprigge—decided Nov. 17, 1868, L. R. 1 Probate and Divorce 608.

Sept. 15, 1858, testator executed a will., In 1863 he became of unsound mind, and in Nov. 1865, was confined to an asylum where he remained until his death Dec 3, 1867 The contents of the will were proven and it was established that after execution it was in the custody of the deceased, and remained in his custody. Search was made for it and it could not be found. There was no evidence of destruction of the will and the last date it was proved to have been in existence, was about two months after its execution, when it was seen in deceased's desk. In his opinion Lord Penzance says,—"The presumption of law in this state of things, under ordinary circumstances is that it was destroyed, animo revocandi. It appeared that the testator during a considerable portion of the time that elapsed between the making of the will and his death, was insane. The question therefore arises whether the Court ought to apply the ordinary presumption of law to such a case." He then cited the opinion of Sir C. Cresswell in Hanes vs. Benill 1 Sw. & Fr 153 where it was held that the burden of showing that a mutilated will had not been so mutilated after testatrix became insane, but while she was of sound mind was cast upon contestant. Lord Panzance expresses his concurrence with this opinion and concludes as follows: "The short proposition is, that the burden of showing that the revocation was done, not after the testator became insane, but when he was of sound mind, is cast on those who set up the revocation."

This is an extreme case and appears to lay down the doctrine broadly that the destruction of the will, which was last known to be in testator's custody does not raise the presumption of its destruction by the testator, animo revocandi, in any case where the testator became insane while he had access to the will. It was known to be in existence but about two months and it was more than four years thereafter before testator became of unsound mind.

A like case was that of Johnson's Will 40 Conn 587. But the question was authoritatively settled in the English Court of appeal in 1876, in the case of Sugden vs. Lord St. Leonards, 17 Moaks, English R. 453. (This case fills 99 pages of printed matter, and from it Judge Geddes quotes opinions of Sir J. Hanven, Jessell M. R., Chief Justice Cockburn, all to the effect that the declarations of testator are admissible to rebut presumption of revocation. He also quotes from Shouder on Wills, Sec. 403.—32 Ga. 156, 27th Texas R. 286, and Foster's appeal 87 Penn. St. 87.—to same effect. Want of space forbids any further citations.)

The Judge concludes as follows: It seems to me the authorities above quoted, show that the rule which must inevitably be drawn from the Michigan cases, first cited is in harmony with the results reached by other courts of the highest authority, and stated in the latest text books, and whatever may be the rule elsewhere I cannot doubt, that in Michigan as in England, in Massachusetts, in Texas and Pennsylvania, testator's declarations, subsequent to the making of his will up to the time of his decease are admissible, to rebut the presumption arising from the disappearance of the will that it has been destroyed animo revocandi.

I do not mean to say that a contrary rule prevails in other jurisdictions, but have not deemed it necessary to investigate farther than to ascertain that the views of the Michigan courts are not exceptional.

The sufficiency of the testator's acts and declarations, in connection with the surroundings and circumstances to rebut the presumption of revocation is amply demonstrated by the case cited.

Papillon (Clarke's extract of flax) Skin Cure, like many other inestimable benefits to mankind, was discovered by accident. The proprietor, engaged in the preparation of certain plants, from time to time noticed the effect of working in the pulp vats on the skin. If there was present any cutaneous eruptions, warts, blemishes or scrofulous symtoms, all disappeared as if by magic. After experimenting ten years, it has become a scientific fact and a priceless boon to the human race. From giving away a few bottles, the demand has increased until the sale for the past two years amounts to 1,032,000 bottles. Large bottles only $1.00.

The decision of Judge Geddes in the Hatch will case consumes a good deal of our space this week, but we think the space is put to good use. The decision is one of the most searching, and one of the ablest, that has ever been promulgated by a Probate Judge in this county.

The Francis Labadie troupe played to a fair house Monday evening. Joe, the waif, was admirably carried by Labadie and he had good support in the characters of Peter Grice, Capt. Lazonby, Jack Adams, Lucy and Patty. The play itself, Nobody's Child, is a good one and the troupe do it full justice.

Last Saturday the South Macon Base Ball team went to Holloway to play their first game of ball. The game passed off pleasantly and was witnessed by a crowd of spectators. The Macon boys are fine players, and if they had not lost their grip in the first inning, the Holloway's would had to hustle themselves in order to have won the game. Batteries, Miller and Heany and Martin and Rector. Score, 17 to 9 in favor of Holloway. The return game will be played on the Macon grounds, one half mile west of Grange Hall, next Saturday.

WILLIAMSON'S REFRIGERATOR.

Among the new enterprises that have been set on foot this summer in Tecumseh, none will prove more beneficial or lucrative, we venture to say, than the new refrigerator building erected by C. E. Williamson. It is located on the south end of his business lot, on Ottawa street. The size of the building on the ground, is 50 by 60 feet and is what is called a brick veneer. The hight equals an ordinary three story building but the upper twenty feet or thereabouts is finished off into a huge ice chest for the storage of the congealed liquid. The capacity of this room is 1500 tons of ice; and when filled in the winter season, its supply will last until the ice king puts in an appearance again twelve months after. The lower floor on the ground and a roomy basement are to be used for storage purposes. The capacity of these two rooms is 500,000 dozen eggs. The temperature of these rooms can be kept at a mean average of 36° and never varies over one or two degrees either way from this point. Eggs can be kept for six months as fresh as on the day they were packed. The work was hired by the day, twenty-seven men in all having been employed on the building. A. C. Hemingway, of Orion, Mich., who has had considerable experience in erecting buildings of this character, acted as foreman of the job. 50,000 brick were used which were bought in Toledo and 120,000 feet of lumber, which was got from the Ohio & Mich. Coal & Mf'g. Co., of this village. The lower floor is nearly filled with eggs at the present time. Mr. Williamson has also bought 1000 barrels of prime winter apples, three tons of grapes and 2000 bushels of potatoes which he is now putting in store for future sale. "Ed." was born and brought up in Tecumseh, and we take pleasure in noting his business advancement and prosperity.

A DAY IN DETROIT.

trip to Detroit. The weather was not all that could be desired, but was passable nevertheless, and we put in the time to good advantage. We took the morning Lake Shore train and changed to the Butler accommodation at the Wabash crossing which brought us into Detroit about 10 o'clock. The forenoon was devoted to interviewing all the Tecumseh people we could strike, metaphorically speaking.

Sam A. James is still in the employ of Buhl & Co., and is evidently well fixed. He spends a portion of the time on the road and a part of the time on duty at the house in Detroit. He is taking a trip west on the Lake Shore this week.

We found Mr. F. C. Stoepel at the old quarters on the corner of Jefferson and Woodward avenues. The firm name is now Burnham, Stoepel & Co., and they are conducting two very large wholesale stores, one at Detroit and one at Kansas City. The title of the Kansas City firm is Burnham, Hanna, Munger & Co. Mr. Stoepel is now the principal manager of the Detroit house and he naturally has his hands full. Mr. Stoepel's family connections here and his frequent visits to Tecumseh make him seem almost like a Tecumseh man.

Lavern Ide was found at the bookkeepers desk in J. W. Fales' paper store. He began his book-keeping experience in the HERALD Counting Room, and the knowledge he gained here has been useful to him ever since. He now enjoys a permanent sit at a good salary, owns a house and lot of his own, possesses a handsome wife and good natured baby. If he fails to enjoy life now, it must be his own fault.

Bert Tribou was in his customary place in Pittman's Coal Office. His daily rations must agree with him as he does'nt seem to be pining away to any perceptible extent. His office duties are congenial to him and he has a pleasant home in his uncle's family. His mother, Mrs. E. A. Tribou, is making quite a visit in Detroit at present.

At No. 61 Buhl Block, is W. A. Underwood's law office and here we also found Ex-Judge Howell, of Adrian. The Judge has entered into a business arrangement with Mr. Underwood, who has already worked up an extended practice in corporation law. Corporation business will be the specialty of the new firm. Judge Howell's experience, both as an attorney and on the bench, will peculiarly fit him to act as counsel in cases of this character, involving large money interests. The prospects of a lucrative practice are already very flattering.

Edgar Ide is keeping books for a large carriage repository on Clinton street. Edgar began his office experience while doing missionary work with delinquent subscribers in the HERALD office, and the foundation he laid here is serving him a good turn now. He is doing well now and is ambitious to improve.

Having partaken of a good, square dinner at a Fort street Lunch Room, we set out to transact a few business errands. We did'nt buy a corner lot on the boulevard, nor purchase the Free Press, nor lease the Grand Opera House, but we "did our biz" in good shape exactly according to Hoyle, and took the Wabash train for home at 4 P. M., feeling as happy as a clam at flood tide.

Spencer Payne recently threshed the clover grown on ten acres of ground, the property of Chas. Grant, and the yield was seventy-three bushels. The seed was of the Mammoth variety.—Clayton Journal.

In Morenci last week a marriage took place which bids fair to be the beginning of a happy family. Thro'out the courtship and up to the date of the ceremony the couple had never spoken a harsh word, and from all appearances this state of affairs will continue until death. They are mutes.

Another failure of crops this year necessitates economy among the farmers. The very first step taken towards economizing is to step into the printing office and stop his paper. By so doing he saves $1[illegible] a year. Why don't he do a man[illegible] instead and lay aside his pipe for a year, or stop his beer. He would save more money and be happier and healthier.—Brooklyn Exponent.

If the grocer were asked to donate groceries to persons abundantly able to pay for them he would refuse. The proprietor of the newspaper must pay for the free advertising if the beneficiary does not."—Exchange.

We understand that when the new depot is located the Lake Shore management will fix up a hydrant which can be used in connection with the fire engines for fire purposes. The Lake Shore management evidently intends to do the square thing by Hudson people, and don't make much fuss about it either. The building of a new road is apt to make us for a time forget the old standby which has served us well for so many years.—Hudson Post.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD

The Tecumseh papers mentioned an adventure which befell Conductor F. J. Stout while his train was in Tecumseh one evening last week. Reaching down from his car Mr. Stout grasped and flung a child from the track, saving its life, but himself receiving some pretty bad bruises. The Tecumseh papers mention a bad scalp wound as the result of a contact with a telegraph pole, while his attention was drawn to the child. Mr. Stout is taking a "lay off" as the result of injuries far more severe than the scalp wound. He now discovers that his back is hurt, a rib broken and another injured. Altogether it requires more heroism in Mr. Stout to keep on his feet and walk about, than that he exhibited in saving the youngster in whose interest he got the shaking up.—Adrian Press.

The jury in the circuit court was excused Tuesday. There still remains in the jury room the remnants of a pack of well worn cards, a silent testator to the hard work done by the conscientious arbiters of the dispute of litigants. The green baize cloth of the table is worn through in the center, presumably by the knuckles of the "good men and true" as day after day they dutifully slapped down their kings, queens, jacks, aces, etc. In spite of the hard work that the juries have to perform, there are those who think that jurors have a soft strap. It is no such thing. A man can't afford to leave his profession, shop or farm, and be compelled to spend a month or six weeks at the county seat, playing cards at $2 per day. He can't get out whole. In justice to the "gentlemen of the jury" we must not forget to explain that the card playing is done by the panel who are not on duty at the time.—Adrian Press.

"Death leaves a chasing mark" was never more forcibly demonstrated than in the death of Mrs. Eva J. Ames, wife of Conductor G. W. Ames, which sad event occurred yesterday morning at 8:10 o'clock. Although the death of the lady was not entirely unexpected, yet when the final summons came it was received by all the relatives and her wide circle of friends as a startling shock and with universal sorrow.

Mrs. Eva J. Ames was formerly of Detroit, and the daughter of Capt. David Marshal, of that city, who was a well known, and highly respected old citizen, having held the position of United States marshal for many years, and who died a year ago, while on a visit with his daughter in this city, now deceased, was taken suddenly ill and died. Mrs. Ames by her gentleness of disposition, her amiability and by all the beautiful characteristics which go to make up a faithful and loving wife and mother, had closely endeared herself to all who enjoyed the pleasure of her acquaintance and society. She was married to Mr. Ames two years ago last month, and proved herself a devoted mother to the little motherless children over whom she assumed control, and for whom she as tenderly cared as their own mother possibly could have done, and with as much true devotion as she did for the one which came about 15 months ago to bless her own union. But her life work, so beautifully conducted, is ended, and she has passed to her rest, at the age of 32 years, leaving a devoted husband with five children to mourn her seemingly untimely death.

The above notice is taken from the Bay City Evening Press of Oct. 10th, her death having occurred on Sunday Oct. 9th. The remains were brought to this village yesterday afternoon. Sympathising friends met the mourners at the depot and viewed the remains, after which the coffin was placed in the hearse and proceeded to the cemetery. Brief services were conducted by Rev. W. H. Fabbitt at the vault. Eight floral pieces adorned the coffin, which were of beautiful and elaborate design.

Eva was born in Tecumseh and her youthful years were all passed here. Lovable in life, she will be sadly missed in death. Many of her old associates here followed her remains to the tomb. The bereaved family have the sympathy of our entire community in their affliction. She sleeps beside her father who was laid away one year ago.

GOVERNOR FORAKER'S CLOSE CALL.

Nearly Precipitated Over an Embankment in a Railway Accident.

taining Governor Foraker, State Librarian Deane and a large delegation of Zanesville people, en route to Zanesville, where the governor delivered an address, was derailed near Roseville, ten miles south of Zanesville, about 7 o'clock Saturday night by a defective switch. The engine and baggage car left the track, but the smoker left it, dragging with it the governor's car, which went to the brink of a twenty-foot embankment, and was only prevented from going over by the strong coupling to the rear coach. Governor Foraker and party escaped by crawling through the windows.

A HORROR AT HURLEY.

DISCOVERY OF A CASE LIKE THE BUNDER MURDERS.

HURLEY, Wis., Oct. 8.—A most horrible discovery has been made in this town of [illegible] Scores have been drawn about the country on numerous occasions. Hurley is filled with dives of the lowest character. One of these haunts of infamy was situated upon the brink of a deep ravine just off the main street of the village. It was luckily burned in the big fire and was not rebuilt, and it was near the ruins that the terrible secret was discovered. Monday two hunters took their guns and started out on a lookout for game. They chose this ravine to commence in, but before they had gone very far on their way they suddenly missed one of their dogs, which for some reason turned home.

At length they heard him giving vent to a prolonged series of howls, and hastened in the direction of the noise. Upon approaching the place their olfactory organs were saluted by a most horrible stench, so terrible that they retraced their steps. They kept whistling and calling to their dog, and at last he followed them, but bringing with him in his mouth a blood-stained and tattered silk cap such as is commonly used by trainmen in summer. The fact that there were some tufts of human hair adhering to the jagged rent in the cap, together with their dog's anxiety to return to the spot where he had found the ghastly relic, induced the hunters to trace the dreadful odor and institute search.

They went, and what a sight met their horror-stricken eyes! Right behind the old dance-house, under some rotten logs and a slight covering of earth, they saw the decomposed corpses of seven evidently murdered men. They lay just as their slayers had thrown them, some with gaping wounds, showing that they had fought hard for their lives, while others lay huddled up as if their murderers had done their fiendish work while their victims lay in a drunken stupor. The hunters informed the proper authorities, and an invest gation followed, but no clue could be found to the identity of the corpses, which were so decomposed as to be beyond recognition. The fiends that had placed them there had taken good care to rob them of everything. The remains of the seven men were buried in one grave.

Horrible Find at Toledo, Ohio.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Oct. 8.—A startling tale of human depravity has just come to light in this city. A house, located in block bounded by Michigan, Ontario, Locust and Lagrange streets, was vacated, and a new tenant moved into the dwelling. A cistern located above ground and facing an alley, was noticed to emit a horrible stench. An investigation and a cleansing of the cistern revealed the bodies of fourteen infants. The house was formerly occupied by a mid-wife, who was at once arrested. An investigation will follow.

It is estimated that 50,000 visitors were in the city.

A TALK TO THE KNIGHTS.

MASTER WORKMAN POWDERLY DELIVERS HIS ANNUAL ADDRESS.

He Defends His Administration Against the Attacks of the Anti-Powderly Men—His Views on the Chicago Anarchists—Recommendations—Convention Notes.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Oct. 5.—The whole of Thursday afternoon at the Knights of Labor general assembly was occupied by General Master Workman Powderly in delivering his annual address. He commenced four hours in the delivery and was frequently applauded.

SCENE—POLIS LABOR TEMPLE.

For the most part it was a defense of his administration against the charges which have been made, every one of which he denied. His views on Anarchists were that they should either be compelled to withdraw from the order or be expelled, and regarding the condemned Chicago men he said the man who threw the bomb should be hung and his accomplices punished according to law in Illinois. If the men had not had a fair trial they should be given another, and if they were to be punished for what some one else had done, it was unjust.

He declared that members of the order who howled about the misconduct on the part of the officers of the order, instead of preferring their charges before the courts of the order, should be expelled and added that he had the history of a number of prominent knights who were guilty of this and would produce the same if it was wanted.

Recurring to the Anarchists again he said they had plotted to destroy the order and he had proof of this before him which was also at the service of the assembly.

Speaking of Socialism he said it should not be compounded with Anarchism, and stated that the K of L was founded on Socialistic principles and its constitution an exalted outline of those principles, which he thoroughly endorsed. He recommended efforts to have bills passed by congress establishing a department of labor at Washington, and taking possession of the railways, telegraphs and telephones of the country by the right of eminent domain; all of which he proposed should be put before the next session of congress.

MR. POWDERLY.

In conclusion he said he had served the order as its head since 1879; that he was entitled to its confidence as its head; that the head of the order should always be thoroughly trusted by its members, whatever appearances were, and that if he was not so trusted, and the assembly desired to try another man, he waived his rights of another year's service, and asked them to select their master this session. He would cheerfully make way for his successor.

The address was put into the hands of every delegate, and the assembly adjourned for the day.

Always Reliable.

YPSILANTI, Mich., May 10, 1886.

Gentlemen:—Permit me to volunteer my testimony in favor of the Zoa-Phora. I feel like doing all I can to render you by endorsing and recommending your remedy. Several years ago I used it and it cured me. This last winter, owning probably to a reduced condition of my system, resulting from a severe cold and overwork, my old difficulty returned. I resorted to your Zoa-Phora, but it did not do as well as before; but it does not fail the same. It can be relied on every time. It is all that you claim for it. If my testimony can be of any service to you at any time I am very glad to give it. Zoa-Phora raised me when physicians told me I could not live two months. Any lady who wishes to know the particulars of my case may write me. Yours,

HATTIE COMLEY,

Give Them A Chance

That is to say, your lungs. As a all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is: Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.

Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if every thing else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

TEMPERANCE COLUMN.

[illegible] Committee of the W. C. T. U.

THE RESPONSIBILITIES OF CHRISTIAN MINISTERS FOR THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

[illegible] traffic in its [illegible] and for [illegible] and protection, [illegible] effective [illegible] against the [illegible] a partial [illegible] to appease [illegible] for this wicked [illegible]

[illegible] and commanding position [illegible] to this great question [illegible] aided by their opportunities, acts with a force and authority to wield a profound and powerful influence on the minds of the people. It is because of the moral cowardice and apathetic delinquency of [illegible] Ministers in neglecting their duty as their brothers keeper, that the Prohibition movement of to-day is not an all absorbing and active agency in the annihilation of this great curse of our land.

The woe, the misery, the crime and pauperism that have flooded the country through our toleration of this terrible curse, come like the rumbling of a distant earthquake, to startle our benumbed consciences with the awful charge, "thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground."

Where the Responsibility for the Liquor Traffic Rests.

As has been said, the ministers of the Christian Church are especially responsible for the active conscience of the people on all moral questions. They, of all others, reflect and control moral sentiments of the community, and they ought to see and realize that God and humanity require at their hands on this all important matter. The Church should lead on this, as we have all other moral issues—not wait to be led, and certainly there is no other question now before the world that more strongly demands our united influence and effort, that is so intimately connected with our moral responsibility, and the welfare of the Church as the rum traffic. We cannot keep our duty on this matter out of religion, any more than we can have religion without the exercise of our conscience. It is our heartless indifference to our religious obligations in the matter of using the ballot, that makes the rum seller so defiant; for it is not so much the want of knowledge as it is the want of moral courage on the part of our ministers, that the people are not more decided in their convictions, and it is this want of moral stamina that gives the rum-seller the greatest encouragement for his nefarious business. Plus together with a license as a legal sanction, which serves to justify this murderous policy of selling slow poison, has been the great barrier to the success of temperance; these facts are becoming more and more apparent every day. An intelligent conviction on this subject, in the minds of ministers and church members, promises extraordinary results as the outcome of the grand uprising of the people to demolish the saloon by the only remedy—the ballot, and this just now is a matter of the most absorbing interest.

The Sacredness of Our Vote.

The political vote, by which we express our choice of rulers, is especially now a personal, moral, and Christian duty, that is paramount to all others. The vote, or ballot, is ours by reason of our sovereign capacity, and becomes the representative of our conscience. Therefore, the ballot should be regarded as our most sacred privilege, to be used as an expression of our convictions on all moral questions.

The unwillingness to use the ballot for the annihilation of the liquor traffic is as often due to indolent selfishness as to moral cowardice. The oft-repeated pretext, that our Christianity does not require us to engage in politics, simply means that we are not to carry our religion into our every day lives. Non-partisanship is a term that often expresses a state of moral obliquity and the most dastardly cowardice, and this is the meanest kind of selfish apathy; as expressed in the Bible language, "I would thou wert cold or hot; so, then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth."

The Non-Partisan Delusion

The term non-partisan is frequently used to justify a careless use of our thinking faculties on moral questions. Thus, non-partisanship generally expresses a neglect of opportunities, a lazy exercise of religious convictions, and a wicked shirking of personal responsibility, in the place of an active fulfillment of well known duties; and this is especially true when it is applied to our obligation to vote the liquor traffic out of existence. It is sometimes used under the deceptive guise of religion, as "Non-partisan Gospel Temperance," but non-partisanship is not a good cloak for hypocrisy, the liquor seller and his apologists [illegible] good kind church members who have vicious appetites, are accustomed to resort to this term of "non-partisan" when they want to apologize for, and cover up the horrors that are caused by rum selling, but it is only used [illegible] in a very insidious manner to all religious convictions, and its cloven foot is not, therefore, always apparent to those who love the truth, and to authoritative edicts on the temperance question, it is most successfully used as a "partial" [illegible]

[illegible] our question to personal and [illegible] church, our homes, and all that we hold dear are threatened with an avalanche of crime and debauchery, and the whole country is in the throes of a moral earthquake, caused by the selfish cupidity of rum sellers, and their sympathizers, who now have control of all of the offices, from the lowest to the highest, including nearly all the departments of our government, and all this subserviency to the liquor interest is brought about through our wicked negligence, and partly by our connivance.

Our selfish indifference and inactivity on this question is inexcusable; our wicked neglect of political duties must be overcome, and an active and heroic endeavor made to atone for past negligence by a determined and vigilant use of all the political opportunities we possess, as the most efficient means to annihilate this monster curse of our land. This conscientious use of the ballot for the extermination of alcoholic poison should and must become the acme of our ambition and Christian duty.

DROPPED DEAD.

Ex-Governor Washburn, of Massachusetts, Suddenly Expires.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Oct. 5.—Ex-Governor William B. Washburn of Greenfield dropped dead on the platform at the city hall, at the session of the board of foreign missions, a little before 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

Mr. Washburn was seated on the platform and during the reading of the annual survey by Dr. Smyth, he suddenly fell forward into the lap of the gentleman next him and expired in a few minutes without having spoken a word. The body was carried to an anteroom and Dr. Post summoned, but it was too late. Ex-Governor Washburn came from Greenfield Tuesday morning. He went to the city hall direct.

A constipated habit of the body and all of its pernicious effects are quickly removed by Laxador, the great regulator. Price 25 cents.

The readers of the HERALD will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease requires a constitution treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucus surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength, by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. As advertised the Manchester ball team came down and played our boys a game Tuesday afternoon. The day was all that could be desired, and a good crowd present who felt they were to witness a fine game. They were doomed to be disappointed as it was a very loose game on both sides, boys excepted, for twice they had the game in their own hands, and then gave it away, as the score will show:

William Beevers has purchased the lot on which G. W. Jackson's wagon shop stood. Also, the feed mill and will begin at once to complete the building and prepare to grind feed the coming winter.

At last the long looked for game of ball between the Wolf Creek and Ridgeway teams, was played at Adrian last Saturday. The game was called at 2 o'clock P. M. with the Creek team at the bat. The first three innings were very close, but during the fourth innings the Creeks run in eight scores. Our pitcher's arm gave out so he could not control the ball. The last half of the game was pitched by Palmer and Hinkley, who made it hot for the Creek team. The Creek team acted the part of Gentlemen during the entire game, but there was a rotten mob of outsiders who kept up a hideous yelling that was a disgrace to any community in this enlightened day. Nothwithstanding the defeat, our team extended them another challenge for a game at Britton, but they would not accept. The score by innings is as follows.

Innings	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Wolf Creek	2	0	2	8	0	4	1	1	1—10
Ridgeway	0	1	1	0	0	5	0	2	0— 9

The school house, dist. No. 1, is receiving a new coat of paint.

ONSTED ODDS.

Pleasant weather once more and all are happy in consequence. Farmers are all improving the time to husk their corn.

Wm. Albrich had the misfortune to break his arm one day last week. His being such an old man it is pretty hard on him, but he is improving nicely at present.

The shooting match on Friday last was a failure, the Romeites failing to come; have not learned the reason. Our boys were badly disappointed as they wanted to test their mettle.

The base ball between Tipton and Addison clubs did not come off as was expected, the Addison's having thought better of it and gracefully stayed at home.

It is hoped that the championship of the base ball clubs of Lenawee Co., is finally decided; it seems that Ridgeway had to import some men after all and then got left at last. Report says that they have draped their grounds at Ridgeway in mourning. It is a fitting tribute of departed glory.

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

Farmers are busy husking corn which is turning out about "a bushel to the dozen."

Uncle Eb. Harmon is visiting at Stockbridge this week.

Lenna Miller has been severely afflicted with rheumatism for several weeks.

Robert Easlick's corn turned out 100 bushels to the acre; oats 65. Next the South Macon, on the grounds of the latter, last Saturday. Score 19 to 27 in favor of Holloway. All on account of the pitchers arm giving out in the home team.

L. Osgood and daughters went to AnnArbor Monday.

Easlick's wagon scales cause as much comment as the defeat of the Ridgeway baseball team would, just because he made it himself. That's nothing. Alex. makes anything he thinks of and no two alike. Some call them "The Genuine Wood," others "The Live Oak" and still others "Easlick's Unabridged." It matters not what they are called, so that they give correct weights, and farmers are buying and selling from them before they are entirely finished.

John C. Mills and wife have returned from their trip around the northern Peninsula. The sights and experiences of the trip are too great for a news article.

There is talk of a daily mail delivery among the farmers of Lake Ridge and vicinity.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

M. J. Hines quit working on the section last Monday noon.

Willis and Mary Chatfield are enjoying a visit in Kansas.

We have a blacksmith at last and he is said to be a good one. Mr. Carpenter is a gentleman and should have the patronage of the citizens of this place.

Our Kid nine went to South Macon last Saturday P. M. and did them up to a tune of 27 to 19. This is seven consecutive games the boys have won this season without the loss of a game.

A TRIP TO MONROE AND LAKE ERIE.

On a serene October morning we left our pleasant farm home in Cambridge with carriage and horses for a few day's vacation among friends and relatives, passing over the military road—La Plasance bay turnpike. The first night we stopped with our esteemed friend and independent farmer, three miles east of Tecumseh village, where cheerful good will prevails. On the bright and admired morning we left over the road near where the Indian trail was sixty years past, and well do I remember fifty years ago measuring this ground over, on foot and alone, with over twenty miles of Indian wilderness. Now along this route very productive and well laid out farms, good convenient buildings with happy homes. At 1 o'clock P. M. we were welcomed at the beautiful residence of our brother, on Cass street, Monroe. The next day we called at the residence of our friend, Hon. Joseph Sterling, also at the home of Judge Talcott E. Wing, president of the State Pioneer Society. His father, Hon. Austin E. Wing, entered the first land bought from government in Lenawee county, sixty-three years ago. With a few saddening remembrances we passed over the historic battle grounds fought by the British Gen. Proctor, and thousands of Indians to assist at the massacre of Gen. Winchester's Army, Jan. 22d., 1813. At Brest we met a number of relatives. Here is the splendid fishermans harbor. The Dewey Brothers own several sail boats and many miles of fish netting, with two staunch steam boats, one on Lake Michigan constantly employed in fishing. They sell hundreds of loads to teamsters at their wharf and have large refrigerators where can be stored 300 tons of feozen fish. While we were at the landing over two tons of fish were taken from the boats, among them ten large sturgeon, which sell in N. Y. for eleven cents a pound. On the pleasant morning when preparing for the home ride, a sack of 100 pounds of fish was put in our carriage, which the day before were traversing over the million acre pasturage of Lake Erie. Long shall myself and wife remember the agreeable and sumptuous time in and around Monroe. F. A. D.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, OCT. 20.

PARTISAN INDECENCY.

The following is taken from the Lansing Republican, Republican, and we quote it as a specimen of the most partisan and indecent assaults, and in some instances the motives of men actively at work in behalf of a friend are impugned—yet in all the history of American politics the attemp to cast scandalous reflections on the character of a pure woman, as a matter of spite toward the husband, who was either a candidate or a public official, has hitherto been unknown; that infamy and degradation was reserved to one of the high sounding organs of the Republican party, and the mouthpiece that uttered it was the Minneapolis Tribune of Wednesday morning, which, in referring to the president's visit, made the following outrageous and indecent allustons to Mrs. Cleveland:

"And it is extremely hard to respect either member of this family now touring for votes. Mrs. Cleveland is a handsome mature woman, apparantly several years older than she is said to be. At least she was old enough to have exercised her own free choice in marrying Grover Cleveland. It is inconceivable that she should have married him except to obtain the position of mistress of the White House. Such a marriage would never have been thought of for the astonishing political accident which in the course of two or three years brought Mr. Cleveland out of the obscurity which is his proper element, to the highest position in the nation. It is hard to have respect for a woman who would sell herself to so gross and repulsive a man as Grover Cleveland, and one with a private record so malodorous for the bauble of a brief social ascendency. She is now an object of curiosity and remark for gapping crowds, and her photographs are sold almost if not quite as freely as Mrs. Langtry's. Such is her reward. If she can secure a re-election for Grover she will have four years more of the gratification which the highest social prominence gives and the delight of unlagging newspaper notoriety. After that she will have to put up with being the wife of so insignificant and obscure a man as an ex-president could possibly be. One cannot help a pang of sympathy for her, but she has chosen her lot deliberately.

It is not possible to find any decent excuse for this outrage, which is as destitute of every element of manliness, and as cowardly as was the act of the unmannerly boy who, realizing that he was not big enough to whip a hated companion, found satisfaction for his petty spite by making faces at the boy's sister. That indicates the size and affords the only possible explanation for this contemptible Republican indecency. It is gratifying to know, however, that this outrage aroused the indignation of thousands of the citizens of Minneapolis, and that hundreds of men assembled, headed by Mayor Ames, and burned in effigy the editor of the paper, who, as might be expected, pleads the baby act by asserting that he was not at the office the night the article was prepared and printed.

But, it is doubtless unjust to assume that the Minneapolis Tribune is alone responsible and censurable for the outrage which it printed—it is rather an illustration of the malignant spirit of the Republican leaders, who, feeling that they have no chance for defeating Cleveland's re-election next year by manly measures, are ready to resort to the contemptible act of slandering his wife. Indications of this have been seen during the past ten days in many Republican papers, in the shape of sneering allusions to Mrs. Cleveland, yet it remained for the Tribune to fully uncover the contemptible spirit which prompted them all, by publishing the coarse and brutal allusions which we have given, and which many of the party organs are now printing with evident satisfaction.

In commenting upon the scurrilous article in the Tribune, the St. Paul Pioneer Press says:

The people of Minneapolis thus attest their opinion of a performance that is a disgrace to decency and manhood, and that has brought the blush of shame to the cheek of every honest man and woman in the State, that such an outrage should have been perpetrated by a man who claims citizenship in Minnesota.

FIRES AND OTHER ACCIDENTS.

Brandon, Wis., had a narrow escape from destruction by fire Friday morning. As Milwaukee & St. Paul company's station, freight house, coal-sheds, water-tank and windmill, and several cars are in ashes. Loss, $15,000.

Early Friday morning the Baltic cotton mill, at Baltic, Conn., was destroyed by fire. The mill is owned by the Franklin company of Providence, R. I., and was valued at $[illegible]. The works were operated by H. & A. Aldrich & Co., and 300 hands are thrown out of employment.

The fishing schooner Thomas J. Parr, which sailed from Gloucester, Mass., Aug. 19 with a crew of fourteen men, is given up for lost with all on board.

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—The league champions gave the St. Louis ball players a goose egg to hold Saturday, while they the Detroiters knocked the ball all over the field and scored one run for each inning—three each in the first and second and three in the ninth. Ten thousand people witnessed game. Getzein was the pitcher for Detroit and Foutz sent in the easy balls that the champions handled so well.

Chicago lost Cincinnati by a score of 6 to 5, and on Sunday the Brooklyns polished off St. Louis to the tune of 10 to 2.

Several bloodthirsty speeches were made in English and German and a collection taken up for the benefit of their condemned brothers. Resolutions were adopted and copies ordered sent to the president, the governor of Illinois, and the mayor of Chicago. The meeting passed off without any outbreak.

BUSINESS NOTES.

The full assessed value of railroad property in Illinois is $96,771,929, an increase of $5,599,000 over last year.

The house of J. W. Middleton & Co., printers, stationers, and blank book manufacturers of Chicago, failed Tuesday. The liabilities are placed at $25,595 and the assets at $28,921.

Real estate sales in Milwaukee, Wis., for the year ending Oct. 1 amounted to $6,200,000.

It is estimated that from 6,000,000 to 6,400,000 hogs will be packed in the west during the approaching winter season. The average for five years has been 6,150,000 hogs.

The report comes from St. Louis that a number of the lead smelting firms of the western states and territories and leading ore dealers of Mexico have entered into a combination to keep up prices.

SLOW WORK TO BUILD UP.

Stone upon stone, brick upon brick, slowly is the house built. To-day does not show much progress or advance it will be weeks and even months before the walls are finished, and the plastering, the carpentering, the plumbing and the painting. How tedious, how slow each are. They take their own time. But at last each part of the work is done and the workers have left. Then comes the inspecting by the owner. How great the satisfaction if he can at its close say, "It is well done, I am satisfied." It matters not, now, how discouraged and disheartened he had at times become, while the workers were plodding on. The result of their handicraft can now be enjoyed. So it is often with the invalid, who, after long years of suffering, having gone down lower and lower in the scale of chronic invalidism, has concluded to give a trial of some really good and well-approved remedy. He may for a time see but little change, but little improvement. He may become impatient, and fered treatment does not rebuild in a day, or week, or month, that which had been years in tearing down. The following is a very common form of the commencement of a letter received from this class of patients, by the proprietors of the justly celebrated Treatment, by Compound Oxygen. It was from a lady in Michigan, who had suffered for years with a complication of diseases, some of them deep-seated and chronic.

After three weeks use of the Treatment, she wrote, "Thus far I can see no beneficial results. My kidneys seem to be much disturbed, suffer much pain since using the Compound Oxygen; so much so that I can scarcely get into a position where I can feel comfortable." In the next three weeks she wrote "Am feeling much more comfortable. Your Compound Oxygen broke up a hard cold in a day's use. It is worth all it costs if it does nothing more for me!" She is now, as might be expected from this experience, a firm believer in Compound Oxygen.

This Compound Oxygen has a history wonderful in its way, and worth reading by everybody whose life is worth preserving. That history is embodied in a very interesting two hundred page treatise, which is sent by mail free, on application. Please address Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Renews Her Youth.

Mrs. Phoebe Chesley, Peterson, Cady Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lamented for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and now able to do all my own housework and owe my thanks to Electric Bitters. I having renewed my youth, and feel moved completely all disease and pain."

The Cost of Ignorance.

Absence of knowledge of the fact that physical and mental weakness, indigestion, impure blood, and sick headache can be averted by Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic, costs millions of money annually for uncertain and unreliable decoctions.

WHAT IS IT? AND WHAT IT IS

Papillon Clarke's extract of dax Skin Cure, like many other inestimable benefits to mankind, was discovered by accident. The proprietor, engaged in the preparation of certain plants, from time to time noticed the effect of working in the pulp vats on the skin. If there was present any cutaneous eruptions, warts, blemishes or scrofulous symtoms, all disappeared as if by magic. After experimenting ten years, it has become a scientific fact and a priceless boon to the human race. From giving away a few bottles, the demand has increased until the sale for the past two years amounts, to 1,063,000 bottles. Large bottles only $1.00.

The creations of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., is adopted as the best experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials received from patients and from physicians, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skilful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, suppressions, prolapsus or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe and reliable agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

The Attorney General—Commence again.

Witness—My master got out, opened the street door with his latch key, then returned to the carriage and helped the lady out, and they both passed into the house.

The Attorney General, Were his actions steady?

Witness—They were not, sir. He seemed to be in a strange hurry.

The Attorney General—Did he say nothing to you?

Witness—Nothing. And thinking my day's work was over, I took the horses to the stable. I was glad enough.

The Attorney General—The prisoner was in the habit of carrying a latch key?

Witness—Yes, and always let himself into the house.

The Attorney General—Did you observe whether the gas in the hall was lighted?

Witness—It was. It was always kept on when my master was out. His habit was to turn it off himself, the servants sometimes being abed.

The Attorney General—Now, during the time you were in the prisoner's employment, had you ever passed such a day as this you have described?

Witness—Never.

The Attorney General—Did you ever know him to come home with a lady, alone, at that hour of the night?

Witness—Never.

The Attorney General—All the incidents of the day were unusual?

Witness—Very unusual. I thought them very strange.

The Attorney General—The question I am about to put is, in another form, partly a repetition of one you have already answered. Did you ever know the prisoner to come home in the carriage late at night with a strange lady; that is, with any other lady than his wife?

Witness—Never. With a gentleman sometimes, and sometimes with more than one gentleman, but never with a strange lady.

The Attorney General—He occasionally came home late with friends?

Witness—Oh, yes, but then his wife was always with him.

The Attorney General—During the last few months was this usual?

Witness—No. Mrs. Layton was an invalid and seldom drove out, not once during the last three or four months at night.

The Attorney General—On the day we have gone through, the 25th of March, did you see anything of Mrs. Layton?

Witness—No, sir; she was seriously ill.

The Attorney General—That, however, is not within your personal observation?

Witness—No, sir. My duties were outside the house.

The Attorney General—The lady whom he brought home on the night of the 25th of March was not his wife?

Witness—No, sir. Mrs. Layton had been confined to her room for several weeks.

The Attorney General—You are quite positive on this point?

Witness—Quite positive, sir.

The Attorney General—That will do.

(To the surprise of every one in court, who expected that the witness would be subjected to a long cross-examination, the prisoner asked but few questions.)

Prisoner—You say that at five minutes to 12 I came out of Prevost's restaurant?

Witness—You and the lady, sir.

Prisoner—It was a dark night?

Witness—It was, sir.

Prisoner—Did I call for you?

Witness—No, sir. I saw you come out of the restaurant with the lady, and I drew up at once. I was within half a dozen yards of the door.

Prisoner—When the lady and I got into the carriage, as you say, did I called out "Home?" You observed that my voice was thick and my manner flurried.

Witness—Yes, sir.

Prisoner—Did it occur to you then, or does it occur to you now, that the voice which uttered that word was not my voice?

Witness—No, sir.

Prisoner—You are certain it was my voice?

Witness—Yes, sir.

Prisoner—I wore my ulster?

Witness—Yes, sir.

Prisoner—You drove home, and you saw me open the street door with a latch key and pass into the house with the lady?

Witness—Yes, sir.

Prisoner—Still with my ulster on?

Witness—Yes, sir.

Prisoner—Did I turn my face toward you?

Witness—No, sir.

Prisoner—If I had done so, could you have recognized my features in the darkness?

Witness—Scarcely, sir.

Prisoner—You know nothing more?

Witness—Nothing more, sir.

Prisoner—I do not put the question offensively, you have been a good servant, and I never had occasion to find fault with you, but you are positive that the [illegible] you have given [illegible] after movi[illegible] correct?

Witness—[illegible] who appeared much distressed—I [illegible] sir.

Prisoner—I have nothing more to ask, Moorhouse.

Re-examined—You are a strict teetotaler?

Witness—Yes, sir.

The Attorney General—Did you take any ale or spirits during the day?

Witness—No, sir. I have touched [illegible]

The Attorney General—The prisoner's figure being familiar to you, and your eyesight being so strong that you could distinguish him in the darkness, is it likely that you could be mistaken in him this night?

Witness (reluctantly)—It is not likely, sir.

The Attorney General—Scarcely possible?

Witness—Scarcely possible, sir.

CHAPTER III.

EVIDENCE OF ADOLF WOLSTEIN, WAITER.

The next witness called was Adolf Wolfstein, a waiter in Prevost's restaurant.

The Attorney General—Your name is Adolf Wolfstein?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—What is your trade?

Witness—I am a waiter.

The Attorney General—Where are you employed?

Witness—At Prevost's, in Church street, Soho.

The Attorney General—How long have you been in employment there?

Witness—A little more than seven weeks.

The Attorney General—Do you remember the date on which you entered your present service?

Witness—Yes; it was the 25th of March.

The Attorney General—So that the 25th of March is impressed upon your memory?

Witness—It is for another reason impressed upon my memory.

The Attorney General—Simply answer the questions I put to you. You are a German?

Witness—No, I am French.

The Attorney General—But your name is German, is it not?

Witness—Wolfstein is. It was my father's name, who settled in France when he was a young man.

The Attorney General—You understand English perfectly?

Witness—Oh, yes; perfectly. I spoke it when I was a boy.

The Attorney General—Look at the prisoner.—Do you recognize him?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—Did you see him on the 25th of March?

Witness—Yes. Monsieur came to the restaurant on that day.

The Attorney General—At what hour?

Witness—At 11 o'clock at night.

The Attorney General—Was he alone?

Witness—No; monsieur had a lady with him.

The Attorney General—Did he occupy a private room? If you wish to explain yourself on this matter you can do so.

Witness—I was coming down stairs when I saw monsieur enter from the street with a lady. He looked about him, and seeing me, asked if he could have supper in a private room. I showed monsieur and madame up stairs to a room in which I served.

The Attorney General—What occurred then?

Witness—I handed monsieur the menu?

The Attorney General—In English, the bill of fare?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—What did he order?

Witness—Tortue claire.

The Attorney General—In English, clear turtle soup.

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—Did he consult the lady?

Witness—No.

The Attorney General—Was he long in selecting the kind of soup he ordered?

Witness—No. It was on the instant.

The Attorney General—He merely glanced at the bill of fare?

Witness—That is so.

The Attorney General—Did you get the soup and place it before him?

Witness—I first asked monsieur, "For two?" He said quickly, "Yes, for two." Then I served it.

The Attorney General—In a tureen?

Witness—Yes, in a tureen.

The Attorney General—When you placed the soup before him, did he order any wine?

Witness—I handed monsieur the wine list, and he said, "Champagne." I asked him of what kind. He said, "The best."

The Attorney General—You brought the best?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—That is, the most expensive?

Witness—Of necessity.

The Attorney General—When you placed the wine before him, did you observe any thing that struck you as unusual?

Witness—Yes; it was that, like other people, they should have been drinking their soup, or have finished it; but they had not drunk it.

The Attorney General—Had it been served from the tureen into their plates?

Witness—No, not a spoonful. It was as I brought it—not touched.

The Attorney General—As they were not eating, what were they doing?

Witness—They were engaged in conversation.

The Attorney General—Very earnestly?

Witness—Very earnestly.

The Attorney General—And speaking very low?

Witness—Very low.

The Attorney General—Did you hear anything they said?

Witness—Not a word.

The Attorney General—Upon observing that they had not touched their soup, did you make any remark?

Witness—Yes. I said, "Does not monsieur like the soup?"

The Attorney General—What was his answer?

Witness—He answered, "Oh, yes, it is very good," and slightly pushed the tureen from him with his hand.

The Attorney General—Indicating that he had done with it?

Witness—I regarded it so, and I removed it.

The Attorney General—Did he object to its being removed?

Witness—No, not at all.

The Attorney General—Did the lady object—did she seem surprised?

Witness—No; she said not a word, nor did she look surprised.

The Attorney General—Your answer to the last question causes me to ask whether the lady was old or young?

Witness—But I do not know.

The Attorney General—You said she did not look surprised?

Witness—It is that she did not appear surprised. She did not look up. In truth, she had her veil down.

The Attorney General—Had she removed her cloak?

Witness—No.

The Attorney General—Did she keep it on all the time she was in the room?

Witness—Yes, all the time.

The Attorney General—Now, when you asked the prisoner if he liked the soup, and he answered: "Oh, yes, it is very good," you were surprised to find that they had not drank a spoonful.

Witness—Why, yes, it was surprising.

The Attorney General—Did the prisoner [illegible]

Witness—I filled a glass for madam and one for monsieur.

The Attorney General—Did the prisoner order another dish?

Witness—I asked monsieur, "What will you have to follow?" and handed him the menu—the bill of fare. He said: "Salmon cutlets." "For two, monsieur?" I asked. "For two," he said. I served them.

The Attorney General—Did he at any time summon you by ringing the bell?

Witness—No. It appeared to me that monsieur did not wish to be disturbed; therefore I did not disturb him, but I noticed——

The Attorney General—You noticed what?

Witness—That, as with the soup, monsieur ate nothing, and helped madam to nothing. I waited till I thought it was time, and then I went to the table and asked whether he did not like the salmon cutlets. Monsieur answered: "Oh, yes, they are very good," and pushed them away as before. I removed them, as with the soup. "What will monsieur have to follow?" I asked. "Ices," he said. "Vanilla?" I asked. "Yes," he said, "vanilla." I brought them. They were not eaten.

The Attorney General—Did they drink the wine?

Witness—Monsieur once raised his glass to his lips, but tasted it only, as if he had no heart in it.

The Attorney General—Did he order anything else?

Witness—No. When I asked him he said, "The bill." I brought it.

The Attorney General—What did it amount to?

Witness—One pound four shillings.

The Attorney General—How much of the champagne was drunk?

Witness—Half a glass—not more.

The Attorney General—Did the lady drink any of hers?

Witness—Not any.

The Attorney General—Did the prisoner make any remark as to the amount of the bill?

Witness—Oh, no; he gave me a sovereign and a half sovereign, and said, "That will do."

The Attorney General—Meaning that you could keep the change?

Witness—I took it so, and he said nothing.

The Attorney General—A good customer?

Witness—A very good customer. Not many such.

The Attorney General—Without a murmur or a remark, the prisoner paid you thirty shillings for half a glass of champagne?

Witness—That is so. It was, as I say, surprising. I did not forget it.

The Attorney General—It was not a circumstance to forget. You say that the lady who accompanied the prisoner did not remove her cloak or veil. Was that the case the whole of the time she was in the room?

Witness—The whole of the time.

The Attorney General—Her gloves—did she wear those the whole of the time?

Witness—But, no. I remember once seeing her hand ungloved.

The Attorney General—Her right or left hand? Be particular in your answer, and think before you speak, if it is necessary. My object is to ascertain whether the lady was married, and wore a wedding ring.

Witness (smiling)—But a wedding ring matters not. Those wear them who are not married.

The Attorney General—Reply to my question. Was it her right or her left hand which you saw ungloved?

Witness—I cannot remember.

The Attorney General—Try.

Witness—It is of no use. I cannot remember.

The Attorney General—Can you remember whether it was a small or a large hand?

Witness—It was a small white hand.

The Attorney General—The hand, presumably, of a lady?

Witness—Or of a member of the theatre. Who can tell? We have many such.

The Attorney General—Were there rings upon her fingers?

Witness—I observed one of turquoises and diamonds.

The Attorney General—Was it a ring with any particular setting by which it could be identified?

Witness—A ring set with diamonds and turquoises. That is all I know.

The Attorney General—Would you recognize it again if you saw it?

Witness—I cannot say. I think not. I did not particularly remark it.

The Attorney General—Did you remark the color of her gloves?

Witness—They were black gloves.

The Attorney General—Of kid?

Witness—Yes, of kid.

The Attorney General—At what time did the prisoner and his companion leave the restaurant?

Witness—It must have been about 12.

The Attorney General—Why do you say "It must have been about 12?"

Witness—Because I did not see them leave the room.

The Attorney General—You can, however, fix the time within a few minutes?

Witness—Oh, yes. At 11 o'clock as near as I can remember. I had occasion to go down stairs. When I returned, after three or four minutes, monsieur and madame were gone.

The Attorney General—Were you aware that they had a carriage waiting for them?

Witness—Only that I heard so. I did not see it.

The witness was then briefly cross-examined by the prisoner.

Prisoner—You say that you saw me enter the restaurant from the street, and that I asked you if I could have supper in a private room?

Witness—That is so.

Prisoner—Did you show me into a private room?

Witness—Yes.

Prisoner—Where other persons could not enter?

Witness—Oh, no; it was a room for six or eight persons.

Prisoner—During the time I was there did you attend to other persons besides me?

Witness—Yes.

Prisoner—The room was not strictly private?

Witness—As private as I have said.

Prisoner—What was the first thing I did when I went to the table you pointed out to me?

Witness—You removed your overcoat. It was wet with rain; and it surprised me that madam did not remove hers, which was also wet with rain.

Mr. Justice Fenmore—Do not make remarks. Simply answer the questions put to you.

Witness—Yes, my lord.

Prisoner—What did I do with the overcoat when I had taken it off?

Witness—You hung it up behind you.

Prisoner—On a peg in the wall?

Witness—Yes.

Prisoner—Was this peg quite close to the table at which I sat?

Witness—No, it was at a little distance.

Prisoner—At the back of me?

Witness—Yes.

Prisoner—Did I put the overcoat on before I left the room?

Witness—Yes.

Mr. Justice Fenmore—You have said in examination that you did not see the prisoner and his companion leave the room.

Witness—But when I returned after being away for three or four minutes, monsieur was gone and the coat was also gone.

Prisoner—Then you did not see me put on the overcoat?

Witness—No.

Prisoner—I have nothing more to ask.

Re-examined—Would you be able to recognize the overcoat which the prisoner wore?

Witness—Oh, yes; it was remarkable.

The Attorney General—Is this it? (Ulster produced.)

Witness—Yes; it is the same.

At this stage the court adjourned for luncheon.

CHAPTER IV.

THE EVIDENCE OF LUMLEY RICH, DETECTIVE OFFICER—THE NINE OF HEARTS.

Upon the reassembling of the court, the first witness called was Lumley Rich.

The Attorney General—You belong to the detective force?

Witness—I do.

The Attorney General—On the 26th of March were you called to the prisoner's house?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—At what hour of the morning?

Witness—At 7 o'clock.

The Attorney General—Was the prisoner in the house at the time?

Witness—He was not.

The Attorney General—Whom did you see for the purpose of information?

Witness—The prisoner's coachman, James Moorhouse, and Ida White, lady's maid and other servants.

The Attorney General—What passed between you and the coachman?

Witness—I asked him at what time on the previous night the prisoner returned home. He said at about 12:20, and that the prisoner entered his house accompanied by a lady, opening the street door with his latch key. I asked him if he had seen the prisoner since, and he replied that he had not. I asked him from what part of his dress the prisoner took the latch key, and he replied from the pocket of the ulster he wore.

The Attorney General—Although the prisoner was not at home, was this ulster in his house?

Witness—Yes; it was hanging on the coat rack in the hall.

The Attorney General—Did you take possession of it?

Witness—I did.

The Attorney General—Did you search the pockets?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—What did you find in them?

Witness—The latchkey of the street door and a playing card.

The Attorney General—Nothing else?

Witness—Nothing else.

The Attorney General—Is this the latchkey. (Latchkey produced.)

Witness—It is.

The Attorney General—Is this the playing card? (Playing card, the nine of hearts, produced.)

Witness—It is.

The Attorney General—How do you recognize it?

Witness—By a private mark I put in the corner.

The Attorney General—There was absolutely nothing else in the pockets of the ulster?

Witness—Nothing else.

The Attorney General—Did you see the prisoner before you left the house?

Witness—I did.

The Attorney General—Describe what passed.

Witness—The prisoner suddenly made his appearance while I was questioning the servants and inquired my business there. I told him I was an officer, and that I was there because of his wife being found dead in her bed. "Dead!" he cried; "my wife!" and he rushed to her room. I followed him. He looked at her and sunk into a chair. He seemed stupefied. I had his ulster coat hanging on my arm, and I told him I had taken possession of it. He nodded vacantly. A moment or two afterwards he laid his hand upon the ulster, and demanded to know where I had obtained it. I informed him, from the coat rack in the hall. He cried "Impossible!" and as it seemed to me he was about to speak again, I informed him that anything he said might be used in evidence against him. "In evidence!" he cried, "against me?" "Yes," I replied; "there has been a murder done here." "Murder!" he cried, "and I am suspected!" To that remark I did not reply, but repeated my caution. He said, "Thank you," and did not utter another word.

The prisoner did not cross-examine the witness, and this was the more surprising as it was remarked by all in court that upon the production of the playing card, the nine of hearts, he was greatly agitated.

CHAPTER V.

THE EVIDENCE OF IDA WHITE, LADY'S MAID.

The next witness called was Ida White, an attractive looking woman about 30 years of age.

The Attorney General—What is your name?

Witness—Ida White.

The Attorney General—Do you know the prisoner?

Witness—Yes, he was my master.

The Attorney General—In what capacity were you employed?

Witness—I was lady's maid to his wife, my poor dear mistress.

The Attorney General—Were you in her service before she was married?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—What was her maiden name?

Witness—Agnes Beach.

The Attorney General—When you first entered her service were her parents alive?

Witness—Both of them.

The Attorney General—Do they still live?

Witness—No. Mrs. Beach died on my mistress' wedding day; Mr. Beach died in February of this year.

The Attorney General—Was your late mistress much affected at her mother's death?

Witness—She almost lost her reason. She fell into a fever, and was scarcely expected to live. It was weeks before she [illegible]

The Attorney General—Have you any knowledge of the circumstances of your mistress' engagement with the prisoner?

Witness—She was very much in love with him.

The Attorney General—And he with [illegible]

Witness—I don't think so.

The Attorney General—And according to your observation, not being in love with her, he engaged himself to her?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—Was she a good looking woman?

Witness—She would not generally be considered so.

The Attorney General—Is this a fairly good likeness of her?

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

For some time the financial situation has seemed to be verging toward panic. This is the more significant because every legitimate commercial interest in the country reports a healthy and active condition. Paralysis is, however, steadily advancing upon it. There is apparent drift to wards a condition in which the paramount object is to provide for existing mercantile obligations. The future refusal of credit, and failures and panic would naturally follow. What is the reason of this and whence come it is not difficult to discover. The government receipts are $10,000,000 a month larger than the expenditures. This amount is steadily withdrawn from the circulating medium of the country, and an indefinite continuation of this course would lead to a return to a state of barter, because the government would absorb all the medium of exchange. The Treasury surplus on the 31st of May was $24,000,000, and in the middle of September it was $53,000,000. This sum of about $30,000,000 was removed from the community during the time when business was passing from dullness to the highest activity. Until recently the natural consequences of such diminution could be remedied by paying off the demand debt, and so returning the money to the community. But now the only process under law available for such return is the purchase of bonds in the open market at a high premium.

The withdrawal of so large a sum from bank reserves for a single month is enough seriously to interrupt all the usual functions of the banks. This is illustrated by the course of the Bank of England, where a sudden withdrawal is met at once by an advance of the bank rate, and a bid for the money of the world to replace the amount withdrawn. Yet in London the banking facilities compare most favorably with ours. The total deposits of the banks in New York are about $350,000,000; in London they exceeded £350,000,000; while the total exchanges of the clearing-houses of the two cities are almost identical. In other words, the medium of exchange used in New York is made to do five times the duty which it does in London. In cities, indeed, the transfer of bank checks serves the purpose which is served by currency in small communities. But the activity of currency in this country, as compared with other countries, is fairly indicated by the statement. The present and increasing withdrawal of money by the Treasury is undeniable. Is there any definite assurance of an equal remedial force? The government has bought bonds, and has announced its willingness to buy at a stated price until the 8th of October. Then what? Upon what principle is the government action controlled? What if bondholders decline to respond to the offers of the treasury?

The disturbance which has already arisen could have been endured, but its effects have been aggravated by the fears of further disturbance arising from the law and its operation. This apprehension has led to action of the banks, which greatly aggravates the inconvenience of the community rather than of "Wall Street." Many large financial institutions propose to protect themselves for the present by loaning money on demand securities only, and not for definite periods. But commercial transactions cannot be carried on with capital repayable upon demand, and merchants can mainly offer as security for loans only merchandise in transit or in process of consumption, against which the usual and legitimate practice is to put out four months' promisory notes. If general mercantile credit is abridged, the only resource is to realize upon merchandise by forced sales upon an unwilling market, which means depreciation, failure, and panic. This situation, which was very threatening was relieved by the Treasury offer to buy bonds. This is all that the law now permits. But this is plainly a temporary makeshift. The permanent remedy lies in reducing the revenues of the government to an equality with its legitimate expenditures. This can be effected only by Congress, and the situation intimates pretty distinctly that the remedy can hardly be applied too soon, and Congress might well be summoned to deal with a question which is vital to the whole country, and which involves the interests of the Administration. Serious disaster would be regarded as due to the authority which having the power to remedy declined to use it, and such disaster would be the more exasperating as the result of merely mechanical obstruction, when all the machinery of commercial activity seems to be sound, and every legitimate employment prosperous.—Harper's Weekly.

TEMPERANCE COLUMN.

Edited by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

WEARING THE WHITE FLOWER.

The task was done, the last quotation copied in her note-book, and she leaned back, pausing a moment, above her head, and thought.

It was a pleasant face, refined and intelligent. It had a firm mouth with tender curves about it, and gentle eyes with laughter lurking in them. Yet it was not a pretty face. It was only the lovable, attractive possibilities of the heart shining through that made it pleasing. Her task had been to copy from "Idyls of the King" all quotations that pleased her most, and read them before the class. And she [illegible] how she had done it, and how beautiful it was to live as living the lives of men, and wishing with the ardent heart of sweet sixteen that something of this beauty she could throw into her lessons and herself. And she was wondering if tomorrow when she read them in the class, any one would feel as she did over these quotations. She read them as best she could, and then, for fresher thoughts were pressing, she quite forgot to think of them. But thoughts and words are always coming back, and so it was with these quotations.

They were a merry little company of school mates gathered in a pleasant parlor one evening, and none was merrier than Dora. It was one of those impromptu affairs, made up of song and frolic dear to the hearts of young people and to the memories of older ones. And the little hostess, coming in in the midst of the fun with tray and napkins, declared: "This is an impromptu lunch, my friends, cider and cookies! but there's a barrel of one and a crock of the other, so eat and be merry."

And they ate, and laughed at one of the gayest, who drank his cider and played the drunken man. Yet Dora laughed half heartily, for in her view even pretending to be drunk was painful.

The laughter provoking friend was by her side when she walked home, and talking of the evening. Dora said:

"Harry, I didn't like to see you pretend drunk."

"Honest, Dora?"

"Yes, honest, Harry. It's too sad for even the make believe to be funny."

"May I tell you something, honest?" said Harry, soberly.

"Why, yes, Harry."

"And you won't be provoked?"

"I'll try not."

"Well, I was sorry to see you drink that cider."

"Why, Harry Marks, how strange! We all drink cider at home. There's no harm in cider!"

"I don't know about that!" answered Harry. "I know fellows that get crazy drunk on it."

"But it's hard," remarked Dora.

"But," replied Harry spiritedly, "it's never hard until they get so drunk they can't see. That's the difficulty. Some don't know, and some don't want to know when it's changed. But it wasn't that about fellows getting drunk," speaking quietly again. "It was a thought about you and the other girls."

"What was it?" queried Dora.

"To be candid, Dora, I thought you were too high principled to drink cider."

"Ah!" said Dora a trifle sarcastically, "all right for boys to drink, but not for girls?"

"No! Don't get provoked, Dora. But you always have high notions about things. What's that quotation you read in class the other day?"

"I read about fifty," said Dora mischievously.

"I mean that one about 'wearing a white flower.' Don't you know? I've got the idea, but I can't think how it goes."

Yes, Dora did know. It was one of the loveliest, she thought, and she repeated it promptly: "Wearing the white flower of a blameless life."

"That's it!" and Harry went on earnestly, "and somehow we fellows expect girls like you to do that; to be better than we are, by leaving alone everything that can bring harm to any one."

"But you see we don't," laughed Dora.

"Well, it's like you to, and I don't believe you ever thought about this," said Harry, rallying to the defense. "You've never seen any of the bad effects of cider drinking."

"No, I never have," responded Dora, covering both his statements with one reply, and her last laughing words as Harry left her at the door, were, "I'll think about the cider drinking."

And she did think about it. Nobody guessed how this sensitive, high-minded girl was shocked that one of the least serious of her class-mates should set higher ideals for her womanliness than she herself had set.

"I'll think for a week, until my birthday comes," thought she, as she went to bed. "I'll not be hasty. I'm not quite convinced that Harry takes a sensible view of this cider question. Father and mother don't mind my drinking it." But when she went to sleep she did not dream of cider, but of a beautiful carrier pigeon that came to her window carrying a white flower in his bill and bringing the message, "Wearing the white flower of a blameless life."

The birthday came, and the last thing Dora did that birthday night was to write [illegible] for birthdays and New Years, her girlish motto for the year ahead—"Wearing the white flower of a blameless life," and underneath in resolute hand, "no more cider!"

"To think," she said, laughing softly as she put the little book away, "that to begin to live an ideal quotation I must stop—cider."

But that was not the end of it all. The influence of the "white flower" went beyond herself, and ere her next birthday more than one of her friends had decided for the more cider. Harry had taken an increase.

"My strength is as the strength of ten,
Because my heart is pure."

A Continued Success.

One of the most remarkable successes in the history of Detroit amusement enterprises, has been that of the great Cyclorama, the "battle of Atlanta." Ever since its opening in February, a steady stream of humanity from Detroit, other Michigan cities, Canada and other adjacent territory keeps pouring through the doors of the Cyclorama. The enterprise has enjoyed eight months of continuous success, and as it ages the attendance increases. The same faces can be seen on the platform time and again, the entertainment being on so grand a scale as to preclude the possibility of seeing it altogether satisfactorily on a single visit. At first the public visited the Cyclorama expecting to see a picture or rather a Cyclorama inferior to those of other cities, or to see something similar to other Cycloramas, something they had seen before. Every one, however, after seeing the "Battle of Atlanta," became so amazed and delighted with the extreme novelty, grandeur and perfection of the wonderful illusion shown that it was almost the universal theme of conversation, and the crowds daily increase. During the past two months the attendance of visitors has been much larger than the first months of the opening, and the support the citizens have given this commendable enterprise has been very satisfactory.

The doors of the Cyclorama are opened at 8 a. m., and not closed until 10 at night, every day, Sunday included, and hourly descriptions are given for the entertainment of the crowds.

"The moon of Mahomet arose, and it shall set," says Shelley; but if you will set a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup in some handy place you will have a quick cure for croup, coughs, and colds.

Rand, McNally & Co's. new sectional map of Michigan is the best thing of the kind ever issued. It shows every postoffice, railroad station, village and town, carefully indexed, referring to the exact location where each may be found on the map. The population is also given of every county, town and village. It is folded and bound in a neat cover, making it convenient for carrying in the pocket.

The concluding instalment of Mrs. Rebecca Harding Davis's valuable papers, entitled "Here and There in the South," will be part of the contents of the November HARPER'S, richly illustrated by W. H. Gibson. This chapter deals with the picturesque prairie and bayou country of Attakapas in the Teche Valley beyond New Orleans. The simple and isolated life of the Acadians is skilfully portrayed. Among the specially interesting places described are the Lepers' Land of Bayou St. John, the salt-miners of Petit Anse, and the Acadian home of Joe Jefferson.

Although the price of admission to the Stephens' Dramatic Co. has been placed at the low figure of 10 and 20 cents, it is no sign the company is a cheap one. They have a brass band and orchestra of their own and the music alone is worth the price of admission. This evening they open with the comedy "Perils of New York," a piece written by Mr. Geo. Stevens and is something after the "Joshua Whitcomb" order. Friday evening, "Glenmore Gulch." Saturday afternoon, "A Just Retribution." and Saturday evening, "Circumstancial Evidence," a play founded on the celebrated Vanderpool murder. The Tecumseh Assembly, No. 8089, K. of L. will give a grand ball at the Opera House on Friday evening, Oct. 28th, 1887. The proceeds of the evening will go for the benefit of the Society. Music by the Tecumseh City Orchestra. Bill $1.00. Gallery tickets 15 cents. Committees. On Music, Prof. Skinner—Arrangements, Harry Root, F. B. Wood, W. T. Eccles, Tecumseh; Chas. Robinson, Manchester; Geo. Ferguson, Lake Ridge; John Hewitt, Clinton; Lon Pennock, Adrian—Reception, Dud Macham, B. P. Anderson, E. A. Doke—Floor Managers, W. T. Eccles, Harry Root.

In the fore-front of the October Wide Awake is a tale of adventure, shipwreck, smuggling and piracy, the hero of which was a boy full of Robinson Crusoe—a real boy—so he says—and the boy is Maurice Thompson who writes it. Next comes a harrowing tale of a kidnapper, the pitcher plant. Here is a sentence: "The inside of the pitcher is lined with stiff bristles pointing downward. It is easy enough to walk over them with your six legs (supposing you are a fly) going downward; but the minute you try to turn back you find yourself imprisoned." Grant Allen writes it.

THE COUNTY ALBUM.

Mr. G. C. Atchinson, we are pleased to note, is meeting with success in the gathering of information from which to complete biographies of our fellow citizens. Surely there is no better way to perpetuate the memory of those we love and hold most dear, than having our family history appear in the Portrait and Biographical Album, Chapman Bros. of Chicago, are getting out for this County.

One important fact our people should not lose sight of is that their biographies will be associated in this work with those of every president of the U. S. and every governor of Michigan down to date.

The art of printing, as developed in modern times, has established an immutable method of perpetuating these histories, although it has been reserved for the present generation to introduce and perfect the system of local biography. By this means men of only local reputation, who have been eminent and successful citizens in their own town and county, but who have not achieved what the world calls greatness, can perpetuate their life and history for the gratification of their friends and the advancement of local history. No man is exempt from death; every man, sooner or later the angel summons to his final home. The monument erected to his memory in the cemetery may moulder into dust, but his noble deeds on earth, which would otherwise be forgotten, are perpetuated in a record of this kind. The arts of painting and photography are both utilized in this work the latter to preserve the face and features, the former to preserve the deeds of our friends. Men who have lived worthy lives esteem it a privilege to have their record appear in an enduring work of this character.

Farmer's Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Lenawee County.

The annual meeting of the Members of said company will be held at Dean's Opera House in the city of Adrian on Monday, Oct. 31st, 1887, at 10 o'clock A. M. All members are requested to attend.

GEO. R. ALLIS, Sec. Z. COOK, Pres.

OBITUARY.

John McKinney, the subject of this sketch, was born in the County Antrim, Ireland, on the 9th day of [illegible] 1821. He emigrated to Livingston Co. N. Y., when a lad of ten years, where he resided until he attained his majority. At the breaking out of the war with Mexico he enlisted in the United States army and served with credit and fidelity during the entire war. After his master out he came to Michigan and took up his abode in Tecumseh where he continued to live until the fall of 1884. In 1848, soon after his settlement in Tecumseh he married Jane Dixon, with whom he lived a happy domestic life for nearly thirty years. She passed on to the other shore October 7th, 1878, and her remains were deposited in the Tecumseh cemetery. A second time he served his country as a soldier during the war of the rebellion, being a member of Co. E. 18th Reg. Mich. Infantry. He served during the entire period of his enlistment, and no soldier in that regiment performed his military duty more faithfully and [illegible] [illegible] the fall of 1884 he married Miss Clara Nichols, and moved to Indianapolis. Early in this month he was stricken down with typhoid pneumonia, and died on the 13th inst., just ten years after the day when his son John C. McKinney was laid to his final rest here in Tecumseh. His remains were brought here for burial and impressive services were held at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. W. Mills, on the 14th inst, conducted by Rev. W. H. Babbitt. The body was laid in our evergreen cemetery by his G. A. R. Comrades, with the impressive burial ritual of that order. He was an enthusiastic member of the Grand Army, and Beers' Post turned out in a body in attendance upon the funeral. A wife and young son at Indianapolis, one son grown to manhood, Truman D. McKinney of Toledo, and one daughter, Mrs. A. W. Mills of Tecumseh, survive him and mourn his departure. During the thirty years of the deceased's residence in Tecumseh (excepting the time he was serving in the army—he was an honored and exemplary citizen of this community. He was decided in his political and religious convictions, and yet tolerant towards the views of others. An indulgent father, an affectionate husband, an enterprising citizen, he filled the humble position in life which Providence allotted to him with singular fidelity and honor. His good name and good deeds will be a legacy to his family more enduring than brass and more imperishable than marble.

DIED LIVING DEATHS.

DREADFUL DISASTER ON THE CHICAGO & ATLANTIC RAILWAY.

Sickening Remains of the Victims Gathered Together—Blood Curdling Recital of the Awful Doom of Two Families—An Express Overtaken by a Heavy Freight and Ground to Splinters—Names of the Known Dead and Wounded.

KOUTS, Ind., Oct. 12.—Erie Express No. 12 pulled out of Dearborn station, Chicago, of the Chicago & Atlantic railroad at 7:45 o'clock Monday evening. Conductor Parks was in charge and Engineer Connor and Fireman Wilhelm were the locomotive. The train was made up of two Pullman sleepers, a day coach, a freight car and a baggage car. The night was dark and misty, and the rails were slippery. The train had been out of Chicago but a few minutes when Engineer Connor discovered that his engine had broken her eccentric strap.

After passing Boone Grove Engineer Connor stopped his engine at a water tank two and one-half miles west of this village, or midway between here and Boone Grove. As soon as he had leaped from his engine he threw up the distant semaphore lamp nearly half a mile in his rear. This was to warn a freight that the express train had stopped for water. He had not been at the tank more than two minutes when he heard the freight thundering behind. The grade at this point is very steep, and with slippery rails a heavy train runs at a furious rate. It was too late to warn the flash, which was coming at a tremendous speed. Engineer Dorsey had failed to see the big red semaphore light and his locomotive tore through the fog and mist until it crashed into the rear Pullman coach. Before the collision occurred Dorsey and his fireman saw the lamps burning on the doomed express train, but it was too late to avert the disaster. The two men leaped from their cab and then the crash came.

The engine of the freight plunged so far into the rear Pullman that its upperworks dropped off in the center of the coach. The concussion drove the second heavy sleeper into the day coach, which was reduced to splinters. The platforms of every car were torn away, and the ends of each coach were broken like egg-shells. The cars of the freight train were hurled in every direction.

It was in the day coach that the slaughter occurred. This frail box was smashed to atoms. The sides flew out and the heavy roof sprang into the air and then came down upon the score or more human beings who lay pinned beneath it.

There was a Bohemian family named Miller in this ill-fated coach. They were from Dundee, Ill., and all were en route for Hungary. The father, mother and two daughters sat vis-a-vis. Behind the parents were their two sons. When the heavy Pullmans drove the day coach against the baggage-car the entire family were hurled over the seats, and driven between the ends of the two cars. The flames moved up from behind with fearful rapidity. The father and husband lay dead with an iron rod through his throat, but the rest of the unfortunate family were still alive when the train men sought to rescue them. Everything was done to drag the children from the pile but without avail. The three except nearer and nearer, until finally a cushion of a seat fizzed up just above the woman's head. The poor woman tried to speak, but no intelligible sound escaped her lips. Then she attempted to pass out to her girls, a wee mite of a thing, whose white apron was stained with blood, to the rescuers who were crowd of about the terrible scene. When the woman saw that death was inevitable she closed her eyes as if in prayer, and, wrapping her only free arm around the waists of the children awaited the coming of the flame. From this unfortunate family but one child escaped alive. He was one of the [illegible] by name, a bright lad of [illegible] managed to break out of the furnace [illegible] perished. The boy now [illegible] from the day. He is crushed [illegible] and it is thought he can not live.

A middle-aged Polish lady, who was in the day coach, was caught under a stove, and [illegible] was burned to death before the eyes of the spectators. Dr. William [illegible] of North Judson, by wife and little [illegible] were in the day coach when the crash came. [illegible] Mr. [illegible] for life. He [illegible] but only [illegible] through an opening in the window, but the fingers of the [illegible] held [illegible] a vice-like grip. [illegible] upon her, his wife and [illegible] knowing that the husband and [illegible] warmed his way so [illegible] to rescue them. After the crash that their doom was [illegible] required [illegible] finally [illegible] with their pleasing [illegible] was merely to drag the [illegible] but a wave of flames [illegible] upon the prisoners [illegible] the gray head drop [illegible] the window sill and finally disappear from view.

When the flames had spent their fury a crushed mass and toys invaded the wreck and began to search for the lifeless. But one local romance untouched by fire. This was the body of a man supposed by railway officials to have been a tramp who was stealing a ride on the freight train. His head and [illegible] were crushed to a pulp. In the ruins of the day coach the blackened and dismembered bodies of nine persons were found. The sickening pile of bones and flesh lay near the front end, although fingers and even thigh bones were picked up near the center of the coach. This leads many to believe that at least fifteen, and perhaps twenty, persons lost their lives.

Before it was yet daylight men with teams [illegible] in a rough pine box bore them to this village, where they were placed in a baggage-car pending the coroner's inquest. The pathetic pile of bones, all that remained of the Perry family, was removed to North Judson. So far as can be learned the following persons lost

Dr. Edward Perry, of North Judson, auditor of Stark county; Mrs. Dr. Edward RUINS OF THE FREIGHT ENGINE.

Perry; Ada Grace Perry; Charles Miller, of Dundee, Ills.; Lena Miller; Wilhelm Miller; [illegible] Minnie Miller; [illegible] Miller; [illegible] lady, burned beyond recognition, and an unknown man, of large build, and clean shaven.

The fatally injured are: Herman Miller, of Dundee, and an unknown man who has left for his home.

In regard to the railway horror at Kouts, Ind., Coroner Letherman has rendered a verdict censuring the Chicago & Atlantic company, and declaring that the train dispatcher of the road and Engineer Dorsey, of the freight train were negligent and careless in the discharge of their duties.

MANIACS IN A PANIC.

Fire in an Insane Asylum—Six Women Killed, Others Injured.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Oct. 13.—The Northern Ohio Insane asylum, near the southern limits of the city, was the scene of a horror Wednesday night. While 350 of the inmates, in charge of attendants, were dining in the chapel, a cry of fire was raised. Stifling smoke swept through the room a moment later, and flames shot up all around. There was a stampede—a wild rush of insane people for places of safety. The poor unreasoning creatures shrieked with fear, and scrambled for the doors, but became bewildered in the smoke, and were worse than helpless. The brave and cool-headed attendants, groping amid the smoke and flames, succeeded in rescuing all but six of their charges.

These, all women, were either asphyxiated or trampled to death and their lifeless bodies were found upon the floor after the fire had been subdued. Three others were badly injured. Two of the dead are unrecognizable. The names of the others are: Mrs. Margaret Pitts, Miss Jennie R. Hall, Miss Eveline Scribner, and Mrs. Charlotte Knowlton.

The injured are: Miss Caroline Knowlton, cousin of Charlotte, perhaps fatally; Miss Mary Ogle, and Miss Jane Block.

The fire started in the laundry and attendants' quarters which adjoin the chapel, and was soon gotten under control. The loss will not be large. But for the heroic conduct of the physicians and attendants the loss of life must have been very great, and but for the prompt action of the firemen the flames would certainly have communicated with the great main buildings, which are among the finest in the state.

CITY ELECTIONS.

Republicans Carry Indianapolis—The Result in Other Cities.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Oct. 12.—Returns indicate the election of Denny, Republican, for mayor, by a majority over Edenharter, Democrat, of about 750. The vote cast for Davy, the Labor candidate, in fifty-three out of fifty-seven precincts amounts to 1,300, and this vote is the cause of Democratic defeat, as it came from the Democratic labor wards. The Republican wards show only a very light Labor vote. The council will stand 15 Republicans to 10 Democrats, against 13 Republicans to 12 Democrats last year. The aldermanic board stands 4 Democrats to 6 Republicans. Simeon Coy was elected councilman by an increased majority.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Oct. 12.—The city election which occurred Tuesday was the hottest in the history of the city. John B. Nicklin, Democrat, was elected over Charles Whiteside, Republican, by 118 majority. All the Republican aldermen were elected by majorities ranging from 300 to 500. The Labor ticket cut no figure whatever in the election. The Republican majority in the city is about 1,000.

NEWARK, N. J., Oct. 12.—In Tuesday's charter election Haynes, Democrat, was elected mayor by 1,400 plurality. The Republicans retain control of the council. Four tickets were in the field—Republican, Democratic, Law-and-Order, and Labor.

GALESBURG, Ills., Oct. 12.—Thomas Tait was elected mayor of Knoxville Tuesday in place of Dr. Sheldon, lately adjudged insane.

The first snowstorm of the season occurred Tuesday at points in Wisconsin and Michigan.

An Indianapolis syndicate that purchased a tract of land in Louisiana consisting of 237 acres for $37,000 is engaged in an attempt to drive a colony of negroes from it. The latter propose to remain where they are, and they have sent an appeal to Governor Ross in which they set forth their claims.

The death is announced of Rev. David K. Kerr, D. D., of Lexington, an eminent preacher of the Presbyterian church.

A Washington dispatch says that Secretary Lamar is certain to take the place of vacant on the supreme bench by the death of Judge Woods, and that he will be appointed immediately after handing in his report as secretary of the interior.

It is rumored in Baltimore that Robert Garrett is about to make certain revelations concerning the sale of the Baltimore and Ohio telegraph, that will place that transaction in an unenviable light. It is reported that cablegrams sent by Mr. Garrett were intercepted while the negotiations for the sale were in progress, and that they were concluded in consequence.

HIS RESIGNATION READY.

GENERAL MASTER WORKMAN POWDERLY'S ULTIMATUM.

Barry and Baily Must Be Removed from the Executive Board or He Will Resign—A Riotous Time in the Convention—Barry Shakes His Fist in the General Master Workman's Face.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Oct. 12.—Only more than half of the delegates to the general assembly were in their places when the body was called to order Saturday morning, and it was fully an hour before the absentees began to file in. This condition of affairs was due to the fact that a number of committees were in session until nearly daylight, and that not a few delegates had been participants in a caucus which lasted until long after midnight. While the delegates were gathering, the report that the resignation of Mr. Powderly might be presented before the close of the day, was very generally discussed, and there was a general expression of opinion that a critical stage in the history of the present assembly had been reached. Despite denials from interested sources, friends of Powderly reiterated the statement that his resignation had been prepared and that its acceptance would be insisted upon unless such changes were made in the constitution as would bring about the removal of Messrs. Barry and Bailey from the executive board.

T. B. BARRY.

Just as soon as the usual routine business had been completed a motion was made that the assembly go into executive session. This was stoutly resisted by many of the delegates, but the majority voted in the affirmative. Consideration of the proposed change in the constitution, reducing the number of members of the general executive board to four, and placing the appointing power in the hands of the general master workman, was resumed, and it was still in progress when, at 1:30, the delegates took a recess for dinner.

At times the session was of the most riotous character. The opponents of the administration vigorously attacked the proposition, claiming that the order was sufficiently under the influence of one man's power. On the other side it was urged that the future preservation of the order demanded that the membership of the board should be in full harmony with the head of the order. Charges of personal insubordination were levelled at T. B. Barry, and it is reported that at one point in the session the Michigan legislator rushed up the aisle, and, shaking his fist in front of Chairman Powderly, vigorously denounced what he claimed was an attempt at mob law, and vociferously declared that if he was to be downed, it should be done decently and fairly.

W. H. BAILEY.

THE RECORD OF CRIME.

From the disclosures made at the trial of a number of negro Masons for murder at Greenwood, Miss., it would appear that the lodges among the colored people in that vicinity are criminal organizations, whose principal business is to exterminate such persons as have been unfortunate enough to incur the enmity of the members.

A gang of counterfeiters that has been operating extensively for some time past in the vicinity of Mitchell, Ind., was run down Monday night by federal marshals and taken to Indianapolis.

Maurice Simmons, who was formerly in the cigar-importing business in New York, and who for several years had a regular customer in Gen. Grant, committed suicide Tuesday at Louisville, Ky.

The Salvation Army in Toledo, Ohio, was attacked Thursday by a gang of toughs. The soldiers were sevely handled, but managed to inflict some injuries upon their assailants.

Ex-Congressman Worthington's Daughter Drowned.

PEORIA, Ill., Oct. 12.—Miss Carrie Worthington, daughter of ex-Congressman Worthington, a young lady of great personal beauty and musical accomplishments, fell off the little pleasure boat "The Lotus," Saturday evening at dark, into the Illinois river and was drowned. No one saw or heard her on the boat, but her screams were heard on the shore. When the boat reached shore she was missing. She was just 22 years of age. Miss Worthington was a general favorite with every one in the city.

GIVEN A ROYAL WELCOME.

THE PRESIDENT AND FAMILY HAVING A SPLENDID TIME.

Description of the Chief Executive's Visit to the Different Cities on the Programme—Immense Parades, Gorgeous Decorations and Enthusiastic People Greet Him Everywhere on the Route.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Oct. 11.—The presidential party left Madison, Wis., Monday morning at 9 o'clock. There were several hundred people at the station to see them off, but no organized demonstration. The run to this city was devoid of incidents, except such as those heretofore noted on similar runs, and excepting, also, the short stop at La Crosse, Wis., where in twenty minutes a drive around town, and a reception, was accomplished through cheering throngs representing the whole population. It was the quickest time on record.

Arriving here the travelers found all St. Paul and the surrounding country, packed in solid masses in the Union railway station and adjoining streets, and the enthusiasm made apparent in a mighty and continuous roar, like the meeting of many laughing waters. As soon as Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland stepped on the platform three little misses approached and each shyly offered her tribute to the lady of the White House, said tribute being a lovely bouquet of roses, which were graciously received.

Carriages were then taken and through streets packed with people and between houses whose tops and windows were alive with humanity, the hotel Ryan was reached. Here the official reception took place, the president in his speech referringly referring to the fact that when a girl his wife had attended school in St. Paul, and expressing his satisfaction that the city had neither married nor spoiled her.

A short rest intervened and then the party was driven to the reviewing stand. The streets were illuminated very brilliantly, and the parades consisted of state militia, civic societies and toboggan and carnival clubs and made a fine display, which was highly enjoyed by the president and wife.

From here they were driven back to the hotel, where, after another short rest, the public reception took place, and for three hours the people passed by. The president only shook hands, however, with a few prominent men—his hand wouldn't stand it. At midnight the festival was over and the travelers asleep.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Oct. 12.—The presidential train was a little late in arriving here, the president having expressed a desire to go around by way of Ft. Snelling. No stop was made here, but a salute was fired from the battery. It was 1 o'clock when Minneapolis was reached. An immense crowd had gathered on Washington avenue in front of the depot, and extending for several blocks in either direction, and the vicinity was gay with bunting. As the train came to a standstill President and Mrs. Cleveland emerged from the car and were met by the outstretched hand of Mayor Ames. Cordial greetings followed and ex-Congressman Washburn, Judge J. P. Rea, commander-in-chief of the G. A. R. and several members of the local reception committee were introduced. The members of the Algonquin club, 150 strong, then formed a pathway through the crowd to the carriages. The president, escorted by Mayor Ames, led the way and Mrs. Cleveland upon the arm of Mr. Washburne came behind. The president's landau was drawn by four white horses gaily caparisoned. Cheer after cheer went up from the spectators when the distinguished visitors came into sight and they were continued along the route to the West hotel by the thousands of people that lined the sidewalks, and the thousands more that were in vehicles, in windows or on roofs.

The procession was headed by a detachment of mounted police, followed by Companies A, B and I First regiment National guard, while the Algonquin formed a special escort. It took up a few moments to reach the hotel, and the guests were without further ceremony conducted to the Rorat tower that had been prepared for their coming. In the afternoon there was a drive around the city and later the party visited the exposition, where the building was packed to overflowing. The president made a short speech here, and also just after he got back to the hotel after the drive around the city. At this time Mrs. Cleveland was introduced, and there were loud calls for a speech from her, but she laughingly declined, and, bowing, withdrew.

The party was whisked out of the exposition building by a side door and made their way slowly through packed streets to the hotel where a short rest was taken, and at 6:30 p. m., escorted by militia they, proceeded to their train, and in a few minutes, with a roar of good-bye cheers following them were en route for Omaha.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 13.—Watchfires were lit all along the line of the railway from Minneapolis to Sioux City Tuesday night to light the presidential train on its way and at some points huge bonfires blazed up as train came along. After leaving Omaha there was no stop until St. Joseph was reached, but at all the towns and villages the people were out and anxious to get a look at the the travelers. At St. Joseph the whole town and surrounding country was on hand and gave the party a rousing reception, there was only a half hour to do it in, but what was wanting in time was made up in vigor. Here Mrs. Cleveland was presented with beautiful tributes of flowers by the public school and Roman Catholic school children, and the party was escorted through the town by an immense procession. It was hard work to get to the train, and there came near being a disaster, caused by the pressure from behind pushing those in front nearly under the wheels of the train.

The train arrived at Kansas City at 8:15. A delegation, head by Mr. E. Allen, proceeded to Waldron, fifteen miles north of here, and joined the party. At the station and for blocks around an immense crowd had gathered, and a roar of cheers went up as the train slowly puffed in on the siding nearest the street. The guests were taken to the Coates house, where they retired to their rooms for a brief rest before the later events of the evening. The Third regiment, M. N. G., and the Kansas City Light cavalry, assisted by a number of Democratic clubs of this city and from neighboring towns served as escort to the procession to the hotel, and succeeded in keeping the crowd, which marched along on either side of the carriages, in check. The trades display was a big thing. After a rest a reception to the committee and their wives was held, and it was midnight before the party retired to the third floor, which was wholly reserved for them, no other guests being allowed to occupy rooms there. The city was profusely decorated.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 14.—The entertainment provided for the president at this place Thursday consisted of a drive through the city, a reception, a banquet, and the review of the Priests of Pallas procession. The drive was highly enjoyed, and while out the president stopped at the site of the Y. M. C. A. building and took part in the ceremony of laying the corner-stone.

The hotel was reached again about noon and a rest of an hour or so was taken, and then the party was driven to the exposition house, where 50,000 people had gathered and after a brief welcome by Mayor Kump, the president [illegible] when the delegation of invitation visited him at Washington City that one gentleman in the delegation would sell him a town lot before he got away from the town. It is understood, however, that the executive managed to leave without becoming a real estate owner here. After the [illegible] a public reception took place, and Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland were kept bowing for two or three hours to the passing throng—there was no hand shaking.

The hotel again reached another rest was indulged in, and then the party was barquetted until 9 o'clock p. m. The Priests of Pallas then paraded in review. They made a handsome display with twenty-five floats of varied designs, some of which, like one representing the Missouri militia, being sick on current events. (The legislature refused to appropriate for the militia last session.) About 10 p. m. the party was driven to the train, which, for the purpose of avoiding the crowd, they boarded two miles from the Union station where the people had collected, and were soon on their way to Memphis—nearly a full day's travel.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 15.—The president arrived here Friday at 5 p. m. after a trip that presented no startling features. He was received by the whole population of the city, reinforced by most of the surrounding country, and the air resounded with shouts of welcome. The party was taken to the Gayoso house, passing through a dense throng which was mixed up with the carriages and horses in most miscellaneous manner. On the route the procession passed under an arch constructed of 12,000 cotton bales in front of the cotton exchange. At night a fine display of fireworks was given on boats anchored in the river, and witnessed by the president, Mrs. Cleveland, Col. Vilas, and Mrs. Vilas from a stand built on the bluff. The other two members of the party—Dr. Bryant and Mr. Bissell—"got left" through the eagerness of the reception committee to make sure of their own places close to the chief visitors. After the fireworks the party returned to the hotel, where a private reception was held for the prominent citizens of the city. Saturday a drive about the city was taken, and then a public reception held, at which there was an immense crush, and great eagerness to get a view of the president and wife. At 1 p. m. the party went aboard the special and speeded for Nashville.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Oct. 17.—A shocking occurrence took place at Memphis an hour before the president left there Saturday. The day began with a procession which ended at the court house square, where a stand was erected. The president and party were escorted to seats, and then Judge Elliott, of the chancery court, a prominent and much esteemed citizen, 81 years old, stepped forward and delivered an eloquent address of welcome. At its conclusion he introduced the president and then stepped back and Mr. Cleveland proceeded to res, and in a short and appropriate manner. He was nearly through when Judge Elliott suddenly sank down on a chair, and was dead before the president quit speaking. The death was caused by heart disease, and inexpressibly shocked the president and the whole city besides, although the fact was not made known until after the president had left for this city. Dr. Bryant, who was at Judge Elliot's side during the whole time, informed the president when he noticed the confusion that the judge had fainted.

The party left Memphis on time, and at McKenzie, where the special was transferred to the line of the Nashville & Chattanooga, the president, Mrs. Cleveland, and Col. Vilas got off to shake hands with the people until the transfer was effected. What was their surprise a short time afterward to see the train pull out without them. It had not gone far before the mistake was discovered and the train went back and took its distinguished passengers aboard.

Nothing further of interest occurred and at 9 p. m. Saturday the party arrived at Belle Mead farm where Luke Blackburn and other noted thoroughbred racers were raised. Here they stopped Sunday, but in the afternoon came into this city to visit Mrs. Polk, widow of President Polk. They spent an hour in pleasant conversation and then returned to the farm.

PARSONS WRITES A LETTER.

The Condemned Anarchist Declares for Liberty or Death.

CHICAGO, Oct. 17.—Albert R. Parsons, the condemned Anarchist, has written an open letter to Governor Oglesby, in which he asks the governor to examine the record of the trial of the Anarchists and then to conscientiously decide for himself as to his (Parson's) guilt or innocence. Parsons says: "I am guilty or I am innocent of the charge for which I am condemned to die. If guilty, then I prefer death rather than to go 'like the quarry slave at night,' scourged to his dungeon.' If innocent, I am entitled to and will accept nothing less than liberty." He declares that he is innocent, and says that under no circumstances will he accept a commutation to imprisonment.

Another Plea for the Anarchists.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Oct. 17.—At a citizens' mass-meeting, held at Turner hall Sunday evening, under the auspices of the Trades and Labor assembly, there was a large attendance and the body of the hall and the galleries were crowded. Many ladies were also in attendance. The utmost order prevailed, and the subject of the evening was treated without show of excitement. The speeches were all heartily applauded and resolutions adopted declaring the decision of the Illinois supreme court in the Anarchist cases unduly influenced by capitalistic clamor and the trial before Judge Gary unfair, and earnestly asking Governor Oglesby to prevent the execution.

Timothy Coughlin Set Free.

PONTIAC, Ills., Oct. 15.—The case of Timothy Coughlin, indicted by the coroner's jury for the Chatsworth railroad accident, was taken up Friday by the grand jury and disposed of. The indictment was ignored, the evidence not being deemed sufficient by them to find a bill. Timothy went home in the evening feeling happy.

TENDERED HIS RESIGNATION.

Robert Garrett Resigns the Presidency of the Baltimore & Ohio Road.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 12.—The board of directors of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad company held their regular monthly meeting Wednesday. The city and state, as well as the private, stockholders, were well represented. The board authorized the payment of a 5 per cent. dividend on the stock of the Washington branch. The recommendation of the finance committee that no dividend be paid on the stock of the main line for the past six months was adopted. The sale of the Baltimore & Ohio telegraph to the Western Union was ratified. The railroad company receives for this property $5,000,000 in stock of the Western Union, and an annual rental of $60,000.

A letter was then read from Mr. Robert Garrett resigning the presidency of the company. It was accepted with resolutions of regret.

YPSILANTI, Mich., May 10, 1886.

Gentlemen:—Permit me to volunteer whatever assistance I may be able to render you by endorsing and recommending your remedy. Several years ago I used it and it cured me. This last winter, owning probably to a reduced condition of my system, resulting from a severe cold and overwork, my old difficulty returned. I resorted to Zoa-Phora half fearing that it would not do as well as before; but it does just the same. It can be relied on every time. It is all that you claim for it. If my testimony can be of any service to you at any time I am very glad to give it. Zoa Phora raised me when physicians told me I could not live two months. Any lady who wishes to know the particulars of my case may write me. Yours,

Lesson for October 31.

[illegible] MIRACLES—MARK [illegible]

NOTES. While he spake.—At Matthew's house in Capernaum.—Ruler.—The chief ruler of the synagogue was not the teaching rabbi but [illegible] place. If we may judge from modern church parade [illegible] government would deal with the company through the ruler, who was one of the richest and most influential men, and whose wife would control [illegible]. With humanity he [illegible] and [illegible] would in a large way like Capernaum. Perhaps he [illegible] to assist in official service. This one of [illegible] rulers should be [illegible] when the spirits [illegible] showed the vanity of [illegible] as also the [illegible] [illegible] as birds.—Worshiped.—[illegible] made a sign of deep respect to [illegible].—My daughter is even now dead.—Two other evangelists speak of her as at the point of death and as having died before they reached the house. Matthew gives the story in a condensed form.—The border of his garment.—Probably the fringe.—She was crowded in unwilling to trouble him, and hoping that power might unconsciously go out to heal her.—The miners [illegible].—Probably the finest house in the city.—The flute players.—The professional mourners came to wail and to play doleful dirges on their pipes.—[illegible] feast our subject.—[illegible] from this we will [illegible].—The crowd was put forth.—With some difficulty.—Took her by the hand.—Saving, Talitha, cumi; or Arimaic.—Passed by from thence.—On his way home again.—Two blind men.—A very common disease in the East, owing to children being left unprotected to flies who carry disease from one to another.—Son of David.—Recognizing him as the coming Messiah.—The house.—His own house.—See that no man know it.—Probably on account of the opposition of the scribes spoken of in the last lesson. He wished to be allowed still to teach without interference.

INSTRUCTION.—Trouble brings men to Christ. It is very doubtful if that ruler would ever have declared himself a believer if his daughter had not been sick. Yet it is much better to do as the disciples did, follow Christ in health and peace, and then we shall have the advantage of our faith and discipleship when troubles and sickness come.

Faith becomes rulers. The honored among men are honored by being humble disciples of Christ.

These three miracles all show us that is the place of faith in religion. Faith is the condition in each case. We would be saved from sin we must equally accept Christ as Guide and Saviour.

The raising of the dead to life was not for their sakes. It were better for them to be in heaven. But these miracles prove that death does not end all. Christ and others have been raised from the dead, so may we. There is something beside the body. The soul lives on when the body dies.

That was an ignorant woman. She believed in Christ fully, but she believed very ignorantly and superstitiously. She believed that he had such magical power that if she touched his clothes she would be healed without his knowing it. But with all her ignorance it was true faith. We may regard Catholics and others as very superstitious, but they may have more real faith than we have with all our better light. It is not knowledge that saves us but faith.

Sleep is an unconscious state from which we awake to consciousness, and so is death. So death is called sleep and is hardly ever a figure of speech. We should think of death as a sleep from which our friends have awaken in a truer life. So death is no more to be dreaded by us than a night's sleep.

Faith is not only the condition, it is also the measure of success in the Christ life. "According to your faith" is the Lord's dealing with us. If the faith is absent we can expect no part; if feeble we can hope for little success in Chistian living; if large we may hope for great success in our lives to do good, and great comfort in believing.

Of the men of faith who have done great things Paul knew whom he had believed. He went forward with no question. So he fought a good fight and kept the faith. We may do this.

The blind man when healed should have obeyed. Obedience is better than sacrifice.

OWNERSHIP OF ICE ON THE MILL POND.

Ice forming upon private fresh-water streams and ponds belongs exclusively to the riparian proprietor who may prevent its removal by others or maintain trespass against those who cut it without cause. The owner of an artificial mill pond, who is [illegible] to keep a little [illegible] against the riparian owners to have the ice, which forms thereon remove it, its removal will [illegible] the dam, and a [illegible] of the ice to flow [illegible] by [illegible] a [illegible] the exclusive right to gather [illegible] on the pond or mill [illegible] In Massachusetts the owner of a mill dam, in [illegible] under the mill [illegible] a [illegible] and the water [illegible] and thereby allowed [illegible] for use of [illegible] lessen the water power. When the State appropriates the fee of land for the construction of canals the former owner has no right to take ice therefrom but if the canal is simply a servitude, the owner of the fee is entitled to take the ice when its removal does not interfere with the navigation or the use of the water for hydraulic purposes. In Indiana and Illinois, ice forming upon private water is held to be real estate. In Michigan it is held that, as the ephemeral character of ice renders it incapable of any permanent or beneficial use as part of the soil, it is unlike crops or emblements, and that any sale of ice actually formed is a sale of personality. The measure of damages for a wrongful taking of ice from another's waters, like that of an unauthorized taking of coal from another's mine, is the value of the ice when converted into a chattel and ready for removal and sale. If wantonly destroyed while in the process of formation, the value of the ice that would probably have been saved for market, less the expense of storing it, is the measure of damages.—American Miller.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Anson Roff and wife returned home from a lengthy visit in Illinois and Iowa. They are the first and only ones who stopped off at Clinton on the through train from Chicago to Toledo. Owing to the wreck at Adrian the through trains came from Hillsdale to Jackson and down the branch to Toledo, and vice versa.

John Lardner son of R. Lardner took his people by surprise Saturday by walking in upon them unexpectedly. He has been in the far west for years, where he is engaged in mining and it is said he has been quite successful.

Chas. Parker, who is now traveling on the road, passed Sunday with his parents here.

Chas. F. Clark was on the sick list the first of the week.

Attorney Henry Smith of Adrian, was on our streets Saturday last.

Miss Laura Clark entertained about twenty of her lady friends with a high tea Friday afternoon.

Mrs. Geo. A. Kies and Mrs. Chas. Cummins of Tecumseh, were visiting friends here the latter part of last week and first of this.

Miss Mertie Shoards who has been at Mrs. L. H. Johnson's so much the past summer returned to her house in Brooklyn last Friday.

J. S. Kies has greatly improved his lawn east of his residence by grading it. He has also built a fine Ice house, modern in all respects.

Mrs. E. W. Freese left the last of the week to visit her brother Charles at Hillsdale. She will visit at Ypsilanti before returning home.

Mrs. Alonzo Clark visited Mr. Clark's brother at Ridgeway, the last of the week. He is in feeble health.

Rev. J. H. Fairchild, wife and daughter, returned Friday night from an extensive trip through Canada.

Saturday noon we barely escaped having a serious runaway. Willie McAdam was driving the meat wagon, and in turning the corner by St. John's the horse became frightened and started violently up the street. Will lost one rein and the horse turning short Will was thrown out. The horse ran into a post in front of Chris Schmidt's freeing himself from the buggy he ran in behind the hardware and was soon caught. The harness was broken, otherwise but little damage done. There were many teams on the street at the time and it was fortunate resulting as it did.

Mrs. John Hause returned last week from her long visit with friends in Kansas.

Chas. Burroughs is advertising his Crescent Cough Cure extensively thro' the country. He went to Tipton, Springville and Onsted Thursday last.

In the suit before Squire Keyes last Thursday, Buck vs. Post, the jury brought in a verdict of $9.00 for the plaintiff.

E. B. Rose again Sundayed in Clinton. He left Monday for one of his long trips.

Ben. C. Ellis left Monday noon on his first trip for H. S. Robinson & Bertenshaw.

Minnie Parker of Owosso, arrived the latter part of the week on a visit to H. P. Downs and family.

Kate Murphy of Kalamazoo arrived in town last week for a nice visit with her father and sisters.

W. D. Wear, the wool sorter at the woolen mill, resigned his position and left the first of the week for Brockway Center, where his family are.

Edgar Hunt, who has been working this season for Sam. Anglemeyer, left Tuesday morning for Fredon, New Jersey, his old home.

Fred Wainright and family returned Monday from a visit with friends in Tecumseh. Fred is having a serious time with rheumatism. At times he cannot bear his weight on his foot. It seems to be in one wrist and one ankle.

Miss Gertrude Ice, who has been visiting Mrs. Minnie Hard, leaves tonight for Chicago. She has renewed old acquaintances and formed many new ones, all of whom are loath to have her go from among us.

Alva Heywood presented his specialties at the Town Hall, Tuesday evening, before a large audience. So often has he visited this region that we can give nothing new regarding the entertainment; it was fully up to any of the preceding ones.

The social at Mrs. Rose's, Tuesday afternoon, was largely attended and proved a very pleasant one, the receipts were nearly seven dollars.

The progressive euchre club was entertained by Don Palmer and wife, Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Genevieve Burroughs gave a High Tea party Wednesday afternoon.

S. F. Marsteller has completed a fine vault in the cemetery at Macon.

E. W. Freese visited Detroit, Monday of this week.

The last Friday's postponed game of ball between Manchester and Clinton clubs, took place Tuesday afternoon at Manchester. The day was very cold and but few present—what there looked in numbers they made up in the noise made by the kids who were around with tin horns, etc., and kept in constant use. The Clinton team seemed to be nonplussed at the position as many of his decisions were not only very rank but entirely new to the base ball world. In the first half of the sixth inning she was so very unreasonable that the Clinton boys refused to play longer with him as Umpire. He then declared the game in favor of Manchester 9 to 0. Apparently this was the only rule he was acquainted with. At the end of the fifth inning the score stood as follows: Clinton, 15 runs; 11 base hits; 9 errors. Manch'r, 11 " 8 " " 9 "

Each pitcher was credited with five strike-outs. Many of the errors were excusable on account of the weather.

For unprecedented gall the Manchester correspondent for the Free Press takes the cake. In reporting the ball game Tuesday, it is headed "Clinton shut out at Manchester," and then goes on as though everything was harmonious, and that the score really stood 9 to 0. We thought it cheeky enough to call their nine (picked from several other teams) the Manchester club, but this report of the game is the cap sheaf excelling all others.

James Taylor and wife are entertaining friends from abroad.

Mrs. J. L. Kishpaugh has returned from her visit to Rockford and Grand Rapids.

Wednesday a large number of hogs were shipped from this point—one really wonders where they all come from.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Mrs. Pat Curry has been on the sick list for the past few days.

Dr. R. H. Nelson Detroited last week.

A. R. Arner, a sign on the front of Peter Sharp's store, last week.

Dan Allen is improving the appearance of his house by repairing in various ways.

W. J. Andrews has improved the Fletcher property in the way of building, repairing and painting, a hundred per cent in appearance.

Saturday we were surprised to hear Samuel Rappleye was very sick, he having had a peculiar stroke of apoplexy and for several hours was thought to be dying, but at this writing he is on the gain with a probability of recovery.

Mrs. Ella Aten of Tecumseh, spent Friday with Leon Arner.

Mary Gregory of Quincy, is visiting W. F. Pocklington and relatives in Dist. No. 5.

Mrs. Mary Isable of Baldwin, Mich., who has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Pocklington, for the past few weeks, returned to her home last week Thursday.

Esquire W. H. Arner, who spent several weeks with relatives and friends in Canada, New York State, Pennsylvania and Ohio, arrived home Saturday night and will be found at the bench once more ready to attend to business.

R. T. Bush made a visit to Chicago last week in the interest of literature for the library.

C. L. Waring and mother came home Friday from a visit with relatives in the Empire State.

The L. C. Social will be held at the home of Dr. D. W. Loree this week Friday evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

M. P. Brown of Tecumseh, was in the village Tuesday on business.

Vern Barrett, after attending the play in Tecumseh Saturday evening, was returning home with his best girl, met with the misfortune of tipping over in the ditch, and broke his carriage top. He sent the rig home by a friend and stopped with his best girl over Sunday, returning home Monday noon.

Lafe Rappleye has two young cows from which they made 18 ounces of butter a day each, from September 22d until Oct 22d, amounting to 67 lbs. and 10 oz.

Rev. W. J. Clack and wife of Blissfield, visited friends in the village Tuesday.

Several of our ball enthusiasts went to Clinton last week Tuesday to see the game between the Manchester and Clinton teams.

Rev. and Mrs. Benson, Ada Loree, Clara Temple, Mary and Jennie Osgood, attended the W. F. M. annual meeting of the Adrian district, held at Clinton last week. Mrs. Benson and Mary Osgood were delegates from here.

Samuel Rappleye and wife, received a letter a few days ago from their son Oscar Rappleye, who is at Lanes, Nevada. He is working at the carpenter's trade, and at present is building a tramway of a mile in length, in one of the gold mines. He has just completed a crushing machine for one of the mines. It is upwards of 30 years since he left the home of his childhood and it has been [illegible] his parents [illegible] that he is a gray-headed old man now and thinks of coming home but did not say when.

Our ball team went to Holloway Saturday and played a game which resulted in anotner victory as is shown by the score:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Ridgeway	0	8	2	2	2	0	2	*	*	16
Holloway	4	1	0	0	0	1	0	*	*	6

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

E. G. Walker, county examiner of schools, visited ur school last Thursday, and reports a good school and efficient teacher.

W. B. Peck of Summerville, Monroe Co., is doing this vicinity with school supplies, such as globes, maps, charts, etc.

Frank Bangs is burning a kiln of tile for Easlick, this week.

Robert Easlick has bought a United States organ of J. B. Coller.

Mart Bailey writes from Grant Co., Kansas, that a new town was laid out last June, across the way from his claim, called Conductor, and has grown to two stores, a hotel, postoffice printing office, bakery, feed store, coal yard, blacksmith shop, stage barn, with two daily stages, and a well 214 feet deep in the center of the town, run by a wind mill. He says the well is just half a mile from his house, where he gets his water supply.

Ghosts are becoming quite numerous in the vicinity of the cemetery. Two boys were hurried home, beyond their natural gait, one night last week from seeing two, one in the cemetery and one at the foot of the hill on the north side. They perform sundry freeks, such as moving railfence into the top of apple trees, in one instance it requiring a half day for the owner to right things up, posting notices of farm for sale, visiting mellon and peach orchards, eave-dropping, etc. If they are not real ghosts, they had better look "a little out," for report says that several guns are loaded.

Uncle Eb. Harmon while on his visit last week, had his pocket picked of a watch and $60 in money.

An 8-inch tile ditch will be dug across the Ridge Road at Warren Miller's Corners as an outlet for the land on the west side of the road. The ditch will be 7 feet deep where it crosses the ridge.

While working on a building owned by Elias Brown, last Monday, E. M. Lewis had the misfortune to fall, hurting his leg between the ankle and knee quite seriously.

Died.—At her home in Raisin Center, last Friday night, Mrs. Smith. Deceased has been an invalid for a long time, having been confined to her bed for the last four months. The funeral was held at the Friends church Sunday P. M. at 2 o'clock, Rev R. M. Belden, officiating.

We noticed in last weeks issue an account of the ball game between our Kid nine and the South Macon nine, in which our boys were victorious, "owing to the S. M. pitcher's arm giving out," as they say. Well we understand all about the arm giving out and the Kids say they can do that nine men up any time they want to play.

Mrs. Mary Atwell's residence burned Wednesday afternoon at 1 o'clock. It caught from the chimney—nothing saved—all away from home. No insurance.

Lesson for October 30.

THE HARVEST AND THE LABORERS. MATT. IX, 35. X, 8.

NOTES.—"And Jesus went about."—Observe that this verse is almost identical with Matt. iv, 23, which introduces the Sermon on the Mount as this introduces the commission to the disciples. "Cities," "Villages."—The latter were unwalled, but built as compactly as cities.—"The multitudes" [illegible] and were needed instruction and healing.—"Distressed and scattered, as sheep." The word "distressed" has the stronger meaning of lacerated or torn, like sheep among thorns. The word "scattered" also implies prostration with fatigue and hunger.—"Not having a shepherd."—One who might lead them into the kingdom. He could not himself reach but a part of them.—"The harvest."—Those who were ready to accept the kingdom.—"The laborers."—There was no one but himself since John's arrest.—"The Lord of the harvest"—God who wants all men saved.—"Unclean spirits."—This kind of disability was sharply contrasted with ordinary disease, and was supposed to be caused by real lost demons—"Twelve apostles."—In Christ's life-time they were called disciples, not apostles. But the word apostle, which means one sent, or missionary, came to be applied to them after they had been sent out, and here the evangelist uses the term for the only time in the Gospel, because he is talking of their being sent out by our Lord.—"Peter"—In all the lists of apostles Peter is named first, not as being their official head, but as having personal precedence. The disciples are arranged in sets of four, the first set being headed by Peter, the second by Philip, and the third by James, son of Alphaeus.—"Thaddeus."—The words "Lebbeus whose surname was" are omitted in the Revised Version. This Thaddeus seems to be called "Judas the son (not "brother") of James" in Luke. He had two names, and his father James is not one of the disciples.—"Simon the Cananaean"—Not "Canaanite." He had belonged to a religious party called "Zealots," which was "Cananaean" in Hebrew.—"Judas Iscariot"—That is Judas, a man of Kerioth.—"Who betrayed him."—The fact is mentioned, but no opprobrious term is applied.—"Gentiles," "Samaritans."—Their time had not yet come. It was where the harvest was ripest that he sent the reapers, not that he did not care for others.—"Preach"—Make public proclamation, like herald.

INSTRUCTION.—Jesus was himself the first Christian missionary. And he was an itinerant missionary, not waiting for people to come to him, but going to them. He is our example.

Jesus healed the sick. A good physician, who also tries to help people's souls is perhaps most like Christ in his activity. To nurse the sick is Christ-like.

A tender heart for want and suffering is Christ like. Suffering people are all about us. We must pity them.

True pity for the suffering will surely lead us to do something for them, and then to plan for more than we can do. Jesus did all he could, and then he sent out others to do the same work.

Without the knowledge of Christ this is a very unhappy world. Men have gone astray and must be led back.

It has been 1850 years since Christ spoke these words, and for the harvest is not gathered, and the laborers still few. It is very strange that the Church has not yet converted the world. Very few are those who now go forth in this labor among the cities and villages that are not evangelized. Who of your class will go as a missionary to the heathen abroad, or to the ignorant Negroes or Indians, or whites of our own country?

Jesus does much for the world, but he asks our help. We may be fellow-workers with Christ. It is our highest honor and duty.

There was one traitor in the first company of apostles, but he was soon weeded out of it. Bad men get into the Church, and may be prominent in it. But they are likely to get exposed as Judas was.

Before sending out the apostles Jesus bade them pray. To labor well we must pray well. It is the best preparation for labor.

Poor Gentiles, poor Samaritans. For awhile it was forbidden to preach to them. It was necessary for God's economy with the world. God is just and does right in this even if we do not understand why he gives some special advantages he denies others. He will do right.

COSTLY CONFLAGRATION.

The Business Portion of Marinette, Wis., Swept by Flames.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Oct. 22.—The Journal's Marinette, Wis., special says: The most disastrous conflagration that ever visited here took place Wednesday midnight consuming two entire blocks in the heart of the city containing twenty-five stores, besides a large number of dwellings. The total loss is $200,000. Among the heaviest losses are Watson Bros., hardware, $35,000; O. B. Prime, dry goods, $12,000; Johnson Bros., general merchandise, $15,000; J. J. Lane & Co., $20,000; E. P. Wilson, $8,500. The fire originated in the rear of Lane's dry goods store, owner unknown.

Destructive Fire at St. Louis.

Help Wanted at Tampa, Fla.

TAMPA, FLA., Oct. 22.—This place is in distress owing to the yellow fever visitation. The epidemic is making fearful ravages and the paralysis of business consequent thereupon has thrown many people out of employment, who must be provided for. Consequently money is badly needed and the mayor appeals for charitable to send help of the kind to either himself or the First National bank.

Day Verdict Unanimous.

W. D. Salt, Druggist, Bippus, Ind., testifies: I can recommend Electric Bitters as the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing. Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio, affirms: The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience is Electric Bitters. Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure Kidney, Liver and Blood Diseases, Dyspepsia and Debility.

Happiness.

The foundation of all happiness is health. A man with an imperfect digestion may be a millionaire, may be the husband of an angel and the father of a half a dozen cherubs, and yet he may make it be so troubled with dyspepsia, or any of the disorders arising from an imperfect digestion or a sluggish liver, that Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are the safest and surest remedy for these morbid conditions. Being purely vegetable, they are perfectly harmless.

A Confidential Letter. Dated Oct. 1, 1887 Which We Publish by Permission under a Later Letter, Dated Oct. 12, 1887.

Gentlemen:

Some months ago I received your letter of inquiry. My daughter has been taking your syrup for months, now using the seventh bottle; has been on her back bed-ridden six months with liver consumption. Since using your remedy, has had two large abscesses of the liver which has been cured by using your syrup. Her life has been saved, we all believe, from its use. Yet she is in a very feeble condition and takes no medicine whatever, except your syrup. I invest, think it the greatest blood tonic known, and brandy believe had we known of it a year earlier my daughter would to-day be in sound health. Have had the best medical skill, also travelled extensively here and abroad, but in my lower lobed as equal. I have pursued it to my patients and have in every case it had the most desired effect.

Very respectfully,
DR. A. E. CHAPMAN.

To Hibbard's Iron Tonic Syrup Co.,

Gentlemen:

Your letter of the 7th, just before me and in reply will say, I do, I prefer letter to you will do suffering humanity any good it should be published. It was through a letter from a resident of Pontiac that first brought it to my daughter's notice and my only regret is, that we did not know of it a year, ago instead of the last six months. I shall still prescribe it to my patients, as I think it the most wonderful medicine known, or ever put before the public. Truly your reward will be great as suffering humanity is blessed, and as you become more thoroughly known. Very truly yours,

FOR HONOR'S SAKE.

BY E. L. FARLEON,

Author of "Green Pastures and Pitfalls," "The Bright Side of Life," etc.

Witness—It is very like her.

The Attorney General—Was she strong?

Witness—Very strong.

The Attorney General—Was she obstinate when she took it into her head?

Witness—Twenty-eight.

The Attorney General—Do you know the prisoner's age at the time?

Witness—My mistress told me he was twenty-four.

The Attorney General—Was she well formed?

Witness—No.

The Attorney General—Had she a good figure?

Witness—No.

The Attorney General—Many plain women have some peculiar attraction, either in manners or features. Had she anything of this kind to distinguish her?

Witness—I cannot say she had.

The Attorney General—But there might have been other attractions. Was she brilliant in conversation?

Witness—On the contrary. She had very little to say for herself upon general subjects.

The Attorney General—But she was passionately in love with the prisoner?

Witness—Passionately.

The Attorney General—Did she flirt?

Witness—Yes. One leg was shorter than the other.

The Attorney General—Had she known the prisoner for any length of time before the engagement?

Witness—For a few weeks only, I believe.

The Attorney General—In what way did he make her acquaintance?

Witness—He came to the house.

The Attorney General—In a friendly way?

Witness—He came first upon business.

The Attorney General—To see whom?

Witness—My mistress' father, Mr. Beach.

The Attorney General—Upon what business?

Witness—Upon betting business, my mistress said.

The Attorney General—What was Mr. Beach's occupation?

Witness—He was a bookmaker.

The Attorney General—A betting man?

Witness—Yes. He used to make large books.

The Attorney General—On racing?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—Was he an educated man?

Witness—No.

The Attorney General—Would you call him a vulgar man?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—Did he move in good society?

Witness—He did not.

The Attorney General—But he was rich?

Witness—Very rich. He drank a good deal of brandy.

The Attorney General—You say the prisoner first came to the house upon business. Do you know anything of his pecuniary embarrassments?

Witness—It was some time after he had lost large sums of money by betting upon horses and he had recourse to my father.

The Attorney General—Was he then married?

Witness—No.

The Attorney General—How was it that your mistress became acquainted with him so intimately as to induce her to marry him?

Witness—He was asked by Mr. Beach to stay to dinner, and he stayed.

The Attorney General—Mr. Beach, you say, was not in good society. Had he any desire to get into it?

Witness—He was crazy about it.

The Attorney General—Upon the first occasion of the prisoner's coming at Mr. Beach's house did your mistress make any remark with reference to the prisoner?

Witness—She never ceased speaking about him. She said she had seen the handsomest man in the world.

The Attorney General—Narrate as briefly as you can what occurred between your mistress and the prisoner up to the time they were engaged.

Witness—He came five or six times to the house, and every time he came my mistress was more and more in love with him. I understood from what she told me that he was in difficulties, and that he had lost a great deal of money at horse racing.

The Attorney General—Did he keep racing horses?

Witness—I did not understand that but that he had been betting upon horses. There was money owing not only to Mr. Beach, but to other book makers as well, and the prisoner wished Mr. Beach to arrange the whole matter. "Those things are easily arranged," I said to my mistress; "all you have to do is to pay." "But supposing you haven't the money to pay?" asked my mistress. "I thought Mr. Layton was a gentleman," I said. "There are poor gentlemen as well as rich gentlemen," my mistress said, "and my papa gets a lot of money out of all sorts of people." That was true enough. I have heard him and his friends chuckling over it many times, and Mr. Beach used to call them a lot of something fools. I heard a great deal about "swells" as Mr. Beach called them, being ruined by backing horses, and I know that that was the way he had grown rich. He used to say that he had got a lot of stuck up swells under his thumb. "I can arrange Mr. Layton's business with papa," my mistress said, and when I found her practicing songs at the piano, out of time and out of tune—for she had no ear for music—I knew that she was making up to him. It came about as she wished, and one night she told me she was the happiest woman in the world—that Mr. Layton had proposed and she had accepted him.

The Attorney General—Were there rejoicings in the house?

Witness—A good many big dinners were given, but I can't say much for the company. My mistress was sometimes very happy, and sometimes very miserable. To-day she claimed that he was cold to her, to-morrow she would protest that he was her a lover, as though it were better than a big diamond.

The Attorney General—[illegible] be wanting in affection [illegible] the court-house?

Witness—He wasn't a very warm lover, as far as I could see. [illegible] or a pleasant word, and [illegible] she was in [illegible].

The Attorney General—Do you find the prisoner [illegible]?

Witness—[illegible] two or three [illegible].

The Attorney General—[illegible]?

Witness—As far as my mistress [illegible] was concerned.

The Attorney General—Is it your impression that the prisoner paid court to her for money?

Witness—I don't think he would have looked at her else.

The Attorney General—And that your mistress was [illegible]?

Witness—[illegible] have had some notion of it, but it could have been no pleasant thing for her to talk much about, and it seemed to me that he was glad to avoid it. She didn't think she was as plain as she was. No more [illegible].

The Attorney General—How was the matter finally arranged?

Witness—The money was settled upon my mistress, and after her death it was to go to Mr. Layton.

The Attorney General—Do you know what the amount was?

Witness—My mistress told me it was £21,000.

The Attorney General—Which would come absolutely into the prisoner's possession when his wife died?

Witness—I understood so. My mistress did say something else about the settlement. "There's one thing I would like put in about the money," she said, "and that is, that if he didn't be his if he married again; but I would not dare to mention it."

The Attorney General—Did she give you a reason for not daring to mention it?

Witness—Yes; that he would break the engagement.

The Attorney General—Now, about the wedding. Was it a private or public wedding?

Witness—Not private—oh, no, not at all. Quite a lot of people attended at the church, and afterwards there was champagne served.

The Attorney General—Who [illegible] company?

Witness—Mixed—very much mixed.

The Attorney General—Were there many of his sporting friends present?

Witness—There were all of his set.

The Attorney General—Do you mean to say that all his friends were there as well?

Witness—[illegible] were there as well.

The Attorney General—Did any [illegible] words about it?

The Attorney General—On the wedding day?

Witness—No.

The Attorney General—Was it a [illegible] taken which.

Witness—[illegible] Mr. Layton. I heard [illegible] "Mr. [illegible] you rather invite [illegible] and Mr. Layton answered, "I didn't tell you one of [illegible] I don't mind that a crowd of mere goodies [illegible] you would get breathless." "Not good enough for you, I suppose?" said Mr. Beach. "No," said Mr. Layton, "[illegible] good enough," and then he called [illegible].

The Attorney General—Did Mr. Layton [illegible] to drink to the health of his wife?

Witness—No; she was in the [illegible] and [illegible] anything [illegible] to do with the wedding. Presents? There was nearly a room full of them.

The Attorney General—Many of them from the prisoner's friends?

Witness—No, none.

The Attorney General—Do you know [illegible] that the prisoner's wife presented [illegible] the wedding? Presents there were not a single token from his connections?

Witness—Not a single one.

The Attorney General—Well, they were married, and they went away.

Witness—Yes; they took the night train to Paris.

The Attorney General—Did you accompany them?

Witness—No.

The Attorney General—Did your mistress [illegible] before they left?

Witness—No; some hours afterward, and a telegram was sent to them in Paris, at the Hotel Bristol.

The Attorney General—What is the next thing you remember?

Witness—A telegram arrived from Mr. Layton requesting me to come to Paris immediately. We received the telegram at about 2 o'clock on the day after the wedding, and I went by the night train.

The Attorney General—Did any person meet you?

Witness—Yes; Mr. Layton. He said my mistress was very ill, and he took me to the hotel. She was in bed, and she remained there for several weeks. I attended her the whole of the time.

The Attorney General—Did she have good doctors?

Witness—The best that could be got.

The Attorney General—Was the prisoner attentive to her?

Witness—Pretty well; I shouldn't have liked it.

The Attorney General—What do you [illegible]

Witness—Well, he never [illegible] her [illegible] he never [illegible] to fill with [illegible].

The Attorney General—How long was [illegible]?

Witness—[illegible] Mr. Layton [illegible] Mr. Beach [illegible] to Paris [illegible] Mr. Beach [illegible] Mr. Layton [illegible]

A very pleasant [illegible] party composed of President and Mrs. Angell, other friends and some [illegible] invited [illegible] left Bay City on Monday [illegible] visit Alma College. The [illegible] for church [illegible] A certain amount of income [illegible] expenses may be [illegible] for 5 years, and some subscriptions for a short term have been secured. The president of the college [illegible] D. Boardman [illegible] institution is shown by the fact that in the faculty are the Baptist and the Presbyterian, as well as Presbyterians. But there are those who are not christians and who do not enter heartily into the plan of making this a christian college and of having the Bible for one of the regular text books of the college course.

The number of students already enrolled is [illegible] and letters of inquiry are constantly arriving in regard to the terms of entrance for others. The intention is to give opportunity to young men or young women either of limited means to secure a liberal education, and to furnish aid especially to those who wish to devote their lives to christian work. Southern Michigan is comparatively well supplied with institutions of learning. But this is the only one of high order located in Northern Michigan, and will afford opportunity to many a promising youth to qualify himself or herself for usefulness. The visiting party were exceedingly gratified by what they saw and heard, pleased with the trustees, pleased with the faculty, pleased with the students, all of whom did what they could to render the visit a pleasant one. The exercises in the chapel under the leadership of Rev. A. F. Brusie, of Saginaw City, were full of interest, calling now for smiles and now for tears, only the tears were not tears of grief. Alma College belongs to the Synod of Michigan. The Synod elects its trustees and has a general oversight of its interests. Every Presbyterian minister of the state, is supposed, without being the enemy of any other institution of the kind, to be the special friend of Alma College and to be ready in every way possible to help it along. There is a degree of feeblenes in all sorts of infancy, and of uncertainty about the future. But of the great and popular colleges of our country, there are few that entered into life under more hopeful auspices than this.

THE DRIVE WELL QUESTION.

Collector Osborn, of Tekonsha, is no mild mannered man as our readers will see from the notice he has served on his fellow citizens of Calhoun County. He, or those from whom he has taken this job of collecting, evidently want the cash and want it right away quick.

This may bulldoze a man here and there who will make haste to surrender. But it is not likely the public will know of any such payment without this courageous collector gives him away.

If the Courts, as Wm. D. Andrews & Bro., of New York City, claim, "have already decreed the amount of Royalty on Domestic Wells not exceeding 1½ inches in diameter to be $10 each," this attempt of Mr. Osborn, of Tekonsha, to increase the amount if not paid within "five days" is an impudent attempt to obtain money by intimidation and brands his business with the knavish purpose that underlies the whole scheme of his employers. If he is not playing a losing game then he has more chicken hearted neighbors than he ought to have. He talks big and may make it pay.

TEKONSHA, Sept. 14, 1887.

County of Calhoun, State of Michigan.

Mr. J. L. RAMSDELL, Esq.—

You are hereby notified that the driven wells upon your premises in Tekonsha, Mich., are infringements upon my patents, granted January 14, 1868, No. 73,435; reissued May 9, 1871, No. 4,672, and patent No. 219,875, [illegible] Tekonsha and procure a license for the same, if more convenient, money may be sent [illegible] by draft, registered letter or P. O. order with receipt of location of wells [illegible] and Kittle [illegible] that amount is paid in either case in five days after notice. After that time the royalty is $20 and $30 respectively, without exception, [illegible] in proportion. The single wells operated by machinery and used for manufacturing, or other purposes, are [illegible] and according to value after investigation.

All wells now in use, by attaching to the frame of the well [illegible]

[illegible] Collector.

On the news of this modest demand of Rufus Osborn, Collector, Nelson W. Green shows up from the Hub, with as much assumed confidence as [illegible] faced an execution in the hands of the Sheriff on all the goods, chattels and effects of the people of the State of Michigan. Hear [illegible]

NOTICE.

The long continued litigation as to my Driven Well Patent—Reissue No. [illegible] dated May 9, 1871, was decided in the Supreme court of the United States on May 23, 1887, in two cases, sustaining the patent in full and overruling all objections urged against its validity. See Official Gazette, vol. 32, pp. 1024 and 1326, of June 14, 1887. I think all must now agree with me that my patent is valid beyond any question whatever.

I hereby call upon all users and makers of Driven Wells constructed prior to January 14, 1887, to render an account to me, stating the number of such wells and where situated and whether operated by power or by hand.

It will be for the interest of the users of my wells to attend to this circular promptly, as they will thereby avoid the expense and annoyance of litigation, and, as will be clear without argument; they can settle more favorably before suit than afterwards.

Heretofore the circulars issued relating to my Driven Well Patent have been based upon decisions of the Circuit Courts, and this is the first circular I have issued based entirely upon the final decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, which is the Court of last resort in this country.

It is therefore my intention to give full and timely information to the public, that makers and users of wells may have a complete understanding of the questions involved and have ample opportunity to pay without involving themselves in unnecessary expensive litigation. Infringers need not expect further notice.

Respectfully,
NELSON W. GREEN,

12 Pearl Street, Room 37, Boston, Mass.

A RAILROAD SMASHUP.

A heavy freight train on the Lake Shore was derailed and wrecked in the City of Adrian last Saturday morning. We gather these particulars from the Times:

About 11:30 o'clock this morning, the second section of freight train No. 62, in charge of Conductor Cunningham, and bound east, was climbing the heavy grade between the stone bridge and the depot, with the assistance of the pony engine, which is located in the yard. The journal on the forward end of the third car burned off, about fifty feet west of the Dennis street crossing, causing the two front wheels to detach themselves and eight cars to be piled up promiscuously. Before the car which had caused the accident had stopped, it was nearly half way across Dennis street, and the rails had been torn up some sixty feet back from the crossing. The fifth car, loaded with corn meal, was the most badly damaged. It lay squarely across the track, crushed between those which preceded and followed it, with the contents oozing out of the great breaks in its side. Brakeman Chamberlain was upon this car when the crash came, and jumped to the ground, landing without injury. Another car, similarly loaded, was badly demoralized. Fortunately for the company, the only goods in transit which will be a total loss, so far as known at present, are the two cars of meal already mentioned. At twelve o'clock the wrecking car and a gang of men commenced to clear away the debris. This work will undoubtedly take at least four hours.

Passenger train No. 25, going west, left this station at 12:45 P. M., going over the Jackson branch to Manchester, and thence via the Ypsilanti branch to Hillsdale. Of course all transit between Adrian and points west must stop until the wreck can be cleared away, and the track repaired.

THE HALF LOAF

Editorials say: "Your prohibitionists are impractical and unreasonable. A half loaf is better than none. If you cannot get the whole, you will accept nothing. How much more reasonable to take what you can get now, and wait till you can get more. Progress is the sensible policy. Let the moral reformers understand that it is possible now, and as practical question always draw the line tighter, although tighter still, and so on, till at last you are able to stop the business altogether."

This language seems plausible and [illegible] truth this is the most way. [illegible] there are many reasons why we think otherwise. In the first place, these are the suggestions of political party policy. Between the lines of all such reasoning we can read, we wish you would adopt such a course, for then we could flatter you with the hope of finally reaching your object, without endangering our party success. All who reason thus hold party first and prohibition second, and party anyhow, whatever may become of prohibition, whereas we hold prohibition anyhow, whatever may become of parties.

But that policy would never secure our purpose. Its rule is, "keep even with public opinion." A few years ago public opinion justified liquor drinking; more recently it repealed the prohibitory law of Michigan and enacted our present tax law. How could that which only kept even with public opinion have advanced it beyond where it was at these various times? Keeping even with public opinion is squatting in the present, without any better hope for the future. "You churches and ministers and praying women may go on working up public opinion, and we will try to keep about abreast of it, so as to be sure of being in the majority. Political parties are not leaders of public opinion, only embodiments of it, acting according to it." But how is political public opinion to be known but by expression in the ballot, and how are political measures to be voted on if they are rigidly excluded from the creeds of parties? Politicians were astonished at the expression of public opinion at the late election, opinion which the people had long been denied the opportunity of expressing. If parties will not be leaders, somebody else will lead, and leave the parties stranded wrecks on the shores of the past. If existing parties will not take up the measures that lie nearest the people's hearts, some other party must and will. What has advanced public opinion most during the past few years?—Plainly the third party agitation and the amendment campaign. What has occasioned advanced steps in legislation? Not the petitions of the women, but the growing volume of the third party vote secured the submission of the amendment. The legislators who submitted it thought, if our party don't endorse it and push it will fail, and they were astonished to see that it almost carried in spite of them. The tremendous vote for the amendment led the party in power to hustle around to find something that would be understood to be an advanced step in temperance legislation. Parties heed the voice of votes, and nothing else.

Another reason why we are not content with half a loaf, even temporarily, is because the half loaf is steeped in poison—it recognizes the right of the "sum of all villainies" to be. It houses, feeds and keeps the beast that ought to be killed, and that we mean to kill. Then the figure of the loaf and half loaf when applied to this case, is a false figure, a sophistry. We are not laboring for something which we are ourselves to have, the whole or half, but we are laboring to kill a beast, and what they call the half loaf, besides consenting to his continued existence, is no approximation toward his death. Nay, every compromise downs his bed, every tax feeds and strengthens him, every recognition of his right to be removes the covering of obloquy, and if it does fence him in a little, it gives him a richer pasture field in which to luxuriate. Kill a serpent by building him a golden cage and feeding him on delicacies!

A tiger is prowling in the forest near by. Let the state fence him in, and make a law that he shall eat men only on certain hours of the day, feed him men and not boys, though we know he will jump over the fence every night and seize some boys. Charge ten cents for every man and boy he kills paid by the victim make money out of him to pay our taxes with. Don't kill him, for then we would lose our tax money and perhaps injure our party. If he gets out too often and kills too many, build the fence a little higher—that is, the half loaf, you know. Or gild his lair with beauty, and fill his bower with melody, and raise the price of death to twenty cents, that our receipts may be more—that is the half loaf, you know.

NETTIE STORMS, Teacher.

It wasn't exactly a dull suit that had its trial in Killin's court last Monday—although Mrs. Elizabeth Dull was plaintiff therein; but, on the other hand, it was quite a breezy one at times. Mrs. Dull is an ignorant old lady with a sharp tongue, and Solomon Bresee is an aged and well-to do bachelor, both of whom live near the metropolis of Canandaigua. During the past summer Mrs. Dull had made butter and performed other domestic labor for Solomon, and by this suit she demanded more compensation for her labor than Bresee thought that he ought to give her. Our local attorneys, Wightman and Ingals, advocated Dull side of the controversy, while the persuasive and smiling "Hank" Smith, of Adrian, acted as defendant's counsel. The trial developed not a few humorous and entertaining features, arising from a relation of the peculiar transactions that had taken place between the male and female contestants, and also from the sparring among the legal gentlemen. At about 10 o'clock P. M. the jury returned a verdict of "no cause of action" regarding Mrs. Dull's claim.—Morenci Observer.

There seems to be a deal of controversy at Adrian about Editor Stearns' entire argument seems also to be predicated on a theory that Stearns owns a horse.—Detroit Journal.

In Scribner's Magazine for November General Francis A. Walker, President of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, contributes a vigorous, plain spoken article, entitled "What Shall we Tell the Working classes?" in which he finds the solution of the labor problem in a healthier, manlier, more truly American sentiment among working-men, which can only be fostered and spread by education.

M. P. Brown, a Tecumseh photographer, has caught the California fever and will soon move out there. We remember going to school to him in the happy days gone by, and a good teacher was he, earnest and thorough. He had a habit of delivering a little speech to his scholars just before dismissing them each night, giving some good and wholesome advice, and invariably ending with the quotation, "Let not the low descending sun, shine on thy head no worthy action done." That couplet often comes up before our memory in the hours of meditation, and always with kind remembrance of him who said it. May the richest blessings follow him wherever fortunes misty pathway leads.—Saline Observer.

W. F. M. S.

The fourteenth annual meeting of the Adrian district association convened in the M. E. Church in Clinton, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion, and was presided over by the President, Mrs. Hendrickson of AnnArbor. Mrs. Stalker of Clinton, greeted the association with hearty words of welcome, which was responded to by Mrs. Johnson of AnnArbor, urging the importance of earnest work, as well as the enjoyment of the good things provided.

The program was interspersed with well prepared papers, recitations and duets, thus affording enjoyment as well as business.

There are 21 auxiliaries, with a membership of 473, and 95 subscribers to the "Heathen Woman's Friend."

During the year there have been 7 public and 213 monthly meetings.

Fraternal greetings were extended from the sister church of the place which were richly enjoyed.

Reports from auxiliaries show that many of the workers had passed to their "eternal reward."

Resolutions were passed urging the organization of Children's bands in each auxiliary, and that more earnest effort be made to increase the circulation of the Heathen Woman's Friend.

Thanking the retiring Treasurer for efficient work, the ministers for their presence hoping to see them often in the future in our meetings.

Heartiest thanks were extended the ladies of Clinton auxiliary for their kind hospitality, and also for decorating the church so nicely, to the young ladies for their literary and musical entertaiments, and to the choir who so kindly favored the association with their music, so beautifully rendered. The meeting was one of interest from the commencement, and every one present felt strengthened for the work of another year.

The old Palmyra track is to be torn up and the land will go back to individual owners. This is in accordance with an act of the Legislature requiring the Company to either operate the track or abandon it. They prefered to abandon.—Blissfield Advance.

E. E. Smith is shipping large quantities of honey to Detroit and other cities. He owns about seventy swarms of bees, and they produced for him this season over a ton of honey. The fact of so large a production is only another "proof that the little bee doth improve each shining hour."—Clayton Journal.

Our readers may not have learned that there is an effort being made to have the State Fair permanently located at Lansing. We have no doubt but that this will be a welcome move to all, for it would give the visitor a look at our capital city each year, in addition to the attractions offered by the fair.

Refering to the article in the Adrian Press, in which the jurymen were credited with playing cards, one of said jurymen informs us that immediately after Stearns left them, when he made the discovery, a pack of cards was missing. The boys all thought the gentleman took them, and think it rather mean to accuse the jurymen of a little friendly game after he had stolen their ammunition.—Hudson Post.

There is no certainty that Hall was the man that was burned in Eaton's shed. No one has yet appeared to identify the body. Squire Burroughs states that the stranger told him, in the course of a conversation, that his home was in Ann Arbor. He was acquainted with parties at Plymouth, Mich.; and also appeared to be familiar with names and places in the Genesee valley, New York state.—Hudson Gazette.

A dead eagle was sent to A. H. Boies last week, for mounting. It measured seven feet five inches from tip to tip, an unusual size. The bird had been killed about two weeks before in the lake region of Northern Michigan, and was in bad condition to mount, but Mr. B. did the work nicely, and it is a credit to his skill as a taxidermist. Judging from its size, Mr. Boies is of the opinion that it was strong enough to carry off a 50 pound lamb.—Hudson Post.

It was down in the big ravine in Riga, LenaweeCo., and the revivalist had discoursed on the Bible for two hours and got his audience worked up to the point of enthusiasm. "Now my hearers, there is one thing that it would be impossible for us to get along without. Who can tell me what it is?" He expected the audience to say "religion," but he discovered that he had mistaken the character of his hearers when a grizzled longbeard arose and said "quinine."—Detroit News.

Thos. L. Hecock has disposed of the standing timber upon his land, some 68 acres, adjoining this village, west of Swamp road and north of Mackinaw railroad, to Messrs. Chas. Donahue of the stave mill, and R. H. Nogar—the elm and basswood to former, to be converted into stave and heading bolts; the balance to latter, for timber and wood. A large force of choppers and about a dozen teams are at work slaying the forest and drawing away the timber. This is probably the most extensive body of timber land in this vicinity.—Dundee Reporter.

At the big onion swamp near Seneca Station, partly lying in this township and partly in Dover, between 16,000 and 18,000 bushels of the lachrymose-exciting vegetable have been raised by the various producers there this season. Some 10,000 bushels of that amount have been purchased by one "middleman," J. W. Southard, prices ranging from 50c to 60c, and Thursday he commenced making shipments from the Station. To show the prolific fertility of swamp soil for raising onions, we are informed that S. K. Foster secured about 865 bushels from a single acre. Let no one think that a pretty strong statement, whatever the onions may be.—Morenci Observer.

OBITUARY.

Passed away from earth on Wednesday, Oct. 12th, 1887, at Tecumseh, Mich., Mrs. Caroline D. Fuller, in the 80th year of her age.

Caroline D. Cushing was born in West Townsend, Midham Co. Ver[illegible] 22d of April, 1808. In her earlier life she came to Cicero, N. Y. and here on the 5th of Nov. 1833 she was married to Mr. Charles Fuller. Not long after this Mr. and Mrs. Fuller came to Michigan and made Ann Arbor their home. With an interruption of 4 years spent in Tecumseh, this continued to be their home, until in 1854 Mr. Fuller passed away and until some 2 years since when Mrs. Fuller left first for Detroit and then to be with her sister, Mrs. Bidwell, where, on the date named, she peacefully breathed her last. While living at Tecumseh Mrs. Fuller united on profession with the Presbyterian church of Tecumseh at the same time with her sister Mrs. Bidwell. The church building [illegible] Fuller was of an affectionate disposition and made many friends, a large company of whom were at the depot in Ann Arbor, to meet the train which bore her remains to her old place of residence and to accompany her lifeless form to its last resting place; the funeral service having been held at Tecumseh. Out of the family of eleven children to which Mrs. Fuller belonged only 3 now survive, two sisters and one brother, and of the six children of Mr. and Mrs. Fuller only one now survives, Mr. Geo. C. Fuller, of Detroit.

W. H. B.

Died at her home in Raisin, Oct. 6, 1887, Jane Mitchel, wife of Robert Mitchel, aged 74 years.

The deceased was born in the town of Raphoe, Donegal County, Ireland, in 1813. She was married to Robert Mitchel in 1842, and with her husband and two small children emigrated to America in 1848.

They brought with them to this country very little of this world's goods.

Stephen Mitchel, a brother, had preceded them about 20 years, and although not in affluent circumstances, he had secured for himself a comfortable home for pioneer days. The newcomers were by him kindly received and with a generosity for which he was noted, his own log cabin was thrown open to them and they were made welcome to share with him the scanty means which he possessed. In a few years they bought 40 acres of land adjoining Stephen Mitchel's farm, built a log house and began to make for themselves a home. A heavy growth of timber and the overflowing waters of the swamp Raisin were obstacles not easily overcome, but the strong determination and never ceasing industry of Robert Mitchel and his wife surmounted every difficulty. The forest and the swamp have disappeared, and in their stead may be seen to day a fine farm containing 200 acres of land, with surroundings both pleasant and comfortable.

The wife and mother who shared in the struggles and labors of 45 years, has gone to her rest.

The husband and father is still left in the enjoyment of the home, secured by the united efforts of both and although he will miss the companion who has walked with him so far on life's journey, he is surrounded by kind and loving children, who will do everything in their power to cheer his lonely hours, and will always be ready and willing to guide his tottering footsteps and make smooth his pathway on to the end of life's journey.

CLOSING WORK OF THE KNIGHTS

A Continuous Session for Nine Hours—What Was Accomplished.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Oct. 20.—Three days' work was crowded into one by the general assembly of the Knights of Labor Wednesday, and everybody was tired when, at the end of a continuous session of nine hours, the gavel fell and the convention was at an end. The adjournment was too late for the bulk of the delegates to catch the evening trains, but most of them got away by noon Thursday. The "administration" party is on the whole well satisfied with what has been accomplished, although considerable regret is expressed that it was not strong enough to bounce the discordant elements in the executive board and [illegible] upon the general master workman. HONORING A DEAD HERO.

THE HEADS IN BRONZE.

The bronze statue of Gen. George G. Meade erected in Fairmount park was unveiled Tuesday afternoon with impressive ceremony. The unveiling ceremonies included a grand military pageant, the exercises at the monument, beginning at 3 o'clock, and elaborate banquets and other entertainments in the afternoon to visiting dignitaries of war and state. The grandsons of Gen. Meade lifted the veil from the bronze counterpart of their heroic ancestor. The line of the military parade, which was one of the most imposing demonstrations of the kind ever given in the city, was formed on Broad street at 1 o'clock in four divisions and moved at 1:30 o'clock out Spring Garden street to the park, where the unveiling ceremonies took place.

DAKOTA'S WONDERFUL GROWTH.

Some Statistics About the Home of the Boozers—Suggestions to Congress.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 22.—Louis K. Church, the governor of the territory of Dakota, in his annual report to the secretary of the interior upon the condition of affairs in his territory during the past year, shows that the territory has had another year of wonderful growth in population and wealth. The governor estimates that the grand total of taxable property that will be assessed by the assessors for settlement for the year closely approximates the sum of 2,000,000 acres or 4,168 square miles. The valued area now overflowing settlement is stated to contain 26,811,442 acres.

There is one public school to every thirty children of school age. The population of Dakota is given as 568,157, a gain in the population during the year of 68,157. The total assessment of property in the territory for the past year was $157,935,456, an increase of 40 per cent over 1886. The total bonded indebtedness of the territory is given as $1,758,000. The total railway mileage in operation is 4,258.

The governor recommends the passage by congress of the Dawes-Sioux bill, which aims to reduce the size of the Sioux reservation, and states that on the first Monday of November the people will vote on the question of division of the territory, and the report adds that deep interest is taken in the question of division and admission. "And, whether admitted as one or two states, there are many reasons why the people should not be longer deprived of the right to manage their own affairs." The governor suggests that while this action had law passed by the last congress was of benefit to the territory it might be modified so as to enable capitalists or moneyed corporations to loan money in the territory.

During the night they knew open the safe and obtained $700. They then packed five valises with valuable articles worth $1,500 and left by a rear door. They were seen by a merchant policeman, who gave chase and the robbers were forced to abandon the valises, but made their escape in the darkness.

WHAT AM I TO DO?

This is a question many have to answer daily. They know what they want, but are unhappy but too well known. They are not sick, but are far from being well, and are suffering more or less from some form of disease. Perhaps they do not realize the extent. A Bilious man is seldom a breakfast eater. Too frequently alas, he has an excellent appetite for liquids but none for solids of a morning. His tongue is coated, he has a bad taste in his mouth every morning, sometimes has a headache, at any time of the day feels miserable, nervous and irritable, has a poor appetite, bowels costive, sometimes has a cough which sometimes he thinks is consumption, but it is remarkable how soon it is relieved if he takes a dose of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Sold by all druggists at 25 cents per bottle.

The dispepsia system is wholly out of order and burning or consumption may be a symptom of the two may alternate. There are often Hemorrhoids or Piles in these cases of blood. There may be giddiness and often headache and nervous prostration and tenderness in the pit of the stomach. These cases will this if not effect a cure try Green's August Flower, it costs but a trifle and thousands attest its efficacy.

YPSILANTI, Mich., May 10, 1886.

Gentlemen:—Permit me to volunteer whatever assistance I may be able to render you by endorsing and recommending your remedy. Several years ago I used it and it cured me. This last winter, owning probably to a reduced condition of my system, resulting from a severe cold and overwork, my old difficulty returned. I resorted to Zoa Phora half fearing that it would not do as well as before; but it does just the same. It can be relied on every time. It is all that you claim for it. If my testimony can be of any service to you at any time I am very glad to give it. Zoa Phora saved me when physicians told me I could not live two months. Any lady who wishes to know the particulars of my case may write me. Yours,

HATTIE COMBLEY,
Teacher in Tecumseh, Mich. Home—Ypsilanti.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent

Washington Oct. 20, 1887.

The Federal Capital is preeminent [illegible] and great [illegible] that brings [illegible] people [illegible] Last week the [illegible] Land Women's National [illegible] this week there are [illegible] large time the [illegible] Virginia Avenue [illegible] Women's National [illegible] Congressional [illegible] on [illegible] and [illegible] the details of [illegible]

[illegible] Avenue is only [illegible] of the daily [illegible] Potomac p[illegible] population [illegible] of 88 [illegible]

[illegible] of the meeting being to [illegible] means to improve [illegible] farming and this in[illegible] industry and protect women [illegible] of the country [illegible] without saving that the [illegible] of these questions by such [illegible] conservative and intelligent body [illegible] interchange of views and experiences will be vastly benefi[illegible] to the farm residences, the home and home of the land for upon their [illegible] labors depend the material [illegible] and well being of the choicest country.

The talk of the Herald gossiping in the political circles of the Capital about the charges of bribery and political [illegible] brought against Senator [illegible] of New Jersey, by a prominent member of his own party. This [illegible] asserts openly the [illegible] of the Senator, the attack occupying [illegible] columns in a newspaper [illegible] of the most damaging nature [illegible] is that but for the action of the Senator in the suppression of bribery the election of Sewell, his Republican colleague, the United States Senate would have been Democratic several years ago. The gauntlet is boldly thrown down and the Senator challenged to a legal contest.

The Virginia State officers have been liberated upon a writ of habeas corpus upon their own recognizance, and the case is set for final hearing in the Supreme Court, on the first Monday in November. It is the prevailing opinion that the decision of Judge Bond will be affirmed.

Generals Roger A. Pryor and Benjamin F. Butler will bring the cases of the Chicago Anarchists to the attention of the Supreme Court the last of this week, with the hope of securing a supersedeas, and remanding the case to the Illinois courts. Gen. Butler's retainer in this suit is $1,500, and [illegible] in addition while engaged [illegible]

Mr. Cleveland has materially modified his views on the relations of department officials who are members of political clubs to the civil service, and his colleague, Mr. Edgerton, takes issue with the original position of the Report. The present attitude of the majority of the Civil Service Commission upon this question is, I am sorry to say, is far from encouraging to the true friends of reform.

The examination of the war department clerks, under the new civil service rules, which were suspended last summer, has been resumed, and in consequence, the clerks in all the other departments are again having their apprehension of going through this ordeal aroused, for eventually the revised rules will be applied to all.

There is a serious Cabinet disagreement reported over the Alaskan seal fishery question. Messrs. Bayard and Garland being the disputants, and it is given out that the Secretary of State will resign soon unless his views on this matter are secured by the President. It is true this report has been [illegible] those entirely competent, still I believe the report is not entirely unfounded. The latest news of the Treasury, in lieu of the contemplated purchase of bonds, is an order issued [illegible] the number of national banks as depositaries for Government funds, the object being a diffusion of a few millions of the surplus that is becoming such an intolerable burden [illegible] the administration and the people.

FRANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB.

[illegible] of the Farmers' club, of last Friday evening, was well attended, though the weather was rather unfavorable [illegible] president and vice president not being present, [illegible] secretary [illegible] the meeting to order, and appointed A. Brooks, secretary pro tem.

Miss Virginia Daniels then offered her resignation, which was accepted.

A motion was then made to elect a replacer by acclamation, which was carried, and H. C. Daniels was elected to that position.

No other business coming before the club, Chairman Roberts then called the following program:

Song, glee club; essay, Mrs. Elmer Wilcox; recitation, Lucy Love; song, [illegible] glee club; [illegible] P. B. Bradley.

Does wheat raising pay at present prices?

The chief speakers being absent, others were called upon. C. Cooper and Oscar Alexander speaking in the affirmative, and T. M. Cauburn and H. [illegible] Dennis in the negative, which closed the debate.

The name of Oak Park was an [illegible] for this place.

F. M. Cauburn, as chairman of the committee on program then reported for the next meeting. Next came another song by the glee club.

The next meeting will be held at the residence of F. M. Cauburn. The chair appointed as committee for next meeting, E. C. Cook, Mrs. John Pentecost and Mrs. Will Perkins.

A motion was then made and carried to adjourn for four weeks from to-night.

The intricacies of a game of baseball are rather too much for the average female understanding. They talk to us learnedly about pitchers, umpires and fowls, and we smile and try to look very wise. We've got lots of patriotism and are ready to stand by most anything that's got the national stamp on it, but when our rising generation knock out and knock loose teeth and cut lips in their enthusiastic efforts with the bat and ball, we are ready to cry foul indeed. FARMER'S SOCIAL CLUB.

Friday evening, Oct 28, the farmer's social club held a very interesting meeting at John Benedict's. Each one on the program was well prepared with his or her part.

Mr. Coddington read an excellent paper upon raising small fruits. It did not contain any finespun impracticable theories, but was full of plain practical suggestions that any farmer might follow, and he proved, that one farmer at least, has been successful in providing his family with a plentiful supply of fruit in connection with other farm operations.

The subject of building ice houses and saving ice was fully discussed. Added experience much waste from the ice melting at the top, and had come to the conclusion that the ice houses were built too low, and did not admit of large enough air space above.

Mr. Bowen is building an ice house and came over hoping to hear some practical ideas as some had told him his foundation or floor would prove a failure. His floor consists of stone, with a slight descent, which he intends covering with coarse gravel. He was told to cover this at least six inches deep with saw dust then it would be all right, but was advised to add to the height of the building.

Mr. Horton told of an ice house which he had seen that was only eight feet square and kept ice good the season round. The building was twelve feet to the eaves.

The prevailing opinion was that small ice houses for family use should be built higher to be successful, and that old saw dust should be used for covering the ice.

Mr. Bowen felt thinks an air tight vault might be built upon the principle of the cold storage plan.

The club adjourned to meet Friday evening, Nov. 11th, at John Benedict's.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[illegible] Regular Correspondent

WASHINGTON.

The Federal Capital is pre-eminently the city of conventions and great public meetings that bring together people from all parts of the greatest [illegible] week [illegible] the Lumbermen's National Convention, and this week there are two in session at the same time—the Common Builders National Association and the National Agricultural Convention. The latter is the one [illegible] to your readers [illegible] not intended the details of this convention.

The Agricultural Convention is called [illegible] of an act of the forty-[illegible] Congress, and its membership [illegible] the representatives of all [illegible] societies and associations [illegible] the purpose of the meeting being to [illegible] ways and means to improve the [illegible] of farming and thus increase the fertility and productiveness of the agricultural area of the country. And it goes without saying that the discussion of these questions by such a representative and intelligent body—the mutual interchange of views and experiences—will be vastly beneficial to the farmers,—veritably the bone and sinew of the land, for upon their honest labors depend the material prosperity and well being of the whole country.

There is considerable gossip in the political circles of the Capital about the charges of bribery and political treachery brought against Senator McPherson, of New Jersey, by a prominent member of his own party. This man Little, asserts openly these things of the Senator—the attack occupying fifteen columns in a newspaper. One of the most damaging allegations is that but for the action of the Senator in compassing by bribery the election of Sewell, his Republican Colleague, the United States Senate would have been Democratic several years ago. The gauntlet is boldly thrown down and the Senator challenged to a legal contest.

The Virginia State officers have been liberated upon a writ of habeas corpus, upon their own recognizance, and the case is set for final hearing in the Supreme Court, on the first Monday in November. It is the prevailing opinion that the decision of Judge Bond will be affirmed.

Generals Roger A. Pryor and Benjamin F. Butler will bring the cases of the Chicago Anarchists to the attention of the Supreme Court the last of this week, with the hope of securing a supersedeas, and remanding the trial to the Illinois courts. Gen. Butler's retainer in this suit is $1,500, and $250 a day in addition while engaged upon it.

Mr. Oberly has materially modified his views on the relations of department officials who are members of political clubs to the civil service, and his colleague, Mr. Edgerton, takes issue with the original position of the former. The present attitude of the majority of the Civil Service commission upon this question I am sorry to say, is far from encouraging to the true friends of reform.

The examination of the war department clerks, under the new civil service rules, which were suspended last summer, has been resumed, and in consequence, the clerks in all the other departments are again having their apprehension of going through this dread ordeal aroused, for eventually the revised rules will be applied to all.

There is a serious Cabinet disagreement reported over the Alaskan seal fishery question—Messrs. Bayard and Garland being the disputants—and it is given out that the Secretary of State will resign so emphatic his views on this matter are slighted by the President. It is true this report has been denied by one of those quietly concerned. Still I believe the rumor is not entirely unfounded. The latest move of the Treasury, in lieu of the contemplated purchase of bonds, is an order increasing the number of national bank depositaries for Government funds, the object being a diffusion of a few millions of the surplus that is becoming such an intolerable burden long to the administration and the people.

FRANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB.

FRANKLIN, Oct. 21st.—The meeting of the Farmers' club of last Friday evening, was well attended, though the weather was rather unfavorable. The president and vice president not being present, Clifford Crittenden, the [illegible] called the meeting to order and appointed A. Briggs, secretary pro tem.

Miss Virginia Daniels then offered her resignation, which was accepted.

A motion was then made to elect a reporter by acclamation, which was carried, and H. C. Daniels was elected to that position.

No other business coming before the club, Chairman Roberts then called the following program:

Song, glee club; essay, Mrs. Elmer Wilson; recitation, Leon Lane; song, glee club; clip basket, F. T. Bradley; [illegible]

"Does wheat raising pay at present prices?"

The chief speakers being absent, others were called upon. C. Cooper and Oscar Alexander speaking in the affirmative, and T. M. Camburn and H. C. Daniels in the negative, which closed the debate.

The name of Oak Park was announced for this place.

F. M. Camburn, as chairman of the committee on program then reported for the next meeting. Next came another song by the glee club.

The next meeting will be held at the residence of F. M. Camburn. The chair appointed as committee for next meeting, E. C. Cook, Mrs. John Pentecost and Mrs. Will Perkins.

A motion was then made and carried to adjourn for four weeks from tonight.

The intricacies of that national game base ball, are rather to occult for the average female understanding. They talk to us learnedly about pitchers, umpires and fowls, and we smile and try to look very wise. We've got lots of patriotism and are ready to stand by most anything that's got the national stamp on it, but when our rising generation knock out and knock home (self) runs, we, in their enthusiastic efforts with the bat and ball, we are ready to cry foul indeed. FARMER'S SOCIAL CLUB.

Friday evening, Oct. 28, the farmer's social club held a very interesting meeting at John Benedict's. Each one on the program was well prepared with his or her part.

Mr. Coddington read an excellent paper upon raising small fruits. It did not contain any fine-spun impracticable theories, but was full of plain practical suggestions that any farmer might follow, and he proved, that one farmer at least, has been successful in providing his family with a plentiful supply of fruit in connection with other farm operations.

The subject of building ice houses and storing ice was fully discussed. Various opinions of much waste from heat coming at the top, and had come to the conclusion that the houses were built too low, and did not admit of large enough air space above.

Mr. Bowen is building an ice house and came over hoping to hear some practical ideas, as some had told him his foundation or floor would prove a failure. His floor consists of stone, with a slight descent, which he intends covering with coarse gravel. He was told to cover this at least six inches deep with saw dust then it would be all right, but was advised to add to the height of the building.

Mr. Horton told of an ice house which he had seen that was only eight feet square and kept ice good the season round. The building was twelve feet to the eaves.

The prevailing opinion was that small ice houses for family use should be built higher to be successful, and that old saw dust should be used for covering the ice.

Mr. Benedict thinks an air tight vault might be built upon the principle of the cold storage plan.

The club adjourned to meet Friday evening, Nov. 11th, at John Benedict's.

Evictions in Illinois.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 26.—The Pope county circuit court, sitting at Golconda, Ills., has disposed of an extraordinary number of ejectment suits brought at this term by non-resident claimants and their grantees against farmers whose titles were in some respect deficient, but who had been living, as they believed, upon their own land for, in many instances, over a quarter of a century. In each of these cases the occupants were ousted, notwithstanding the fact that they had gone into possession even before patents were granted to the grantors of the claim, who in every case have failed for years to pay any taxes upon the lands they now claim. Two of the cases so determined will go to the supreme court to be tested.

We will sell shoes at prices that would make the leather dealers think we are crazy. The Attorney General—There were no cries, no voices loudly raised?

Witness—I heard none.

The Attorney General—Did you sleep soundly after that?

Witness—No. I was dozing off and waking up the whole of the night—a hundred times, it seemed to me. Now I have reproached myself since that when I saw my master put out the gas in the hall I did not have the courage to go down to him!

The Attorney General—At what time in the morning did you usually rise?

Witness—At 7:30, unless my mistress required me earlier.

The Attorney General—Was that the hour at which you rose on the morning of the 26th of March?

Witness—No; I rose much earlier, at 6 or 6:15. I can't say exactly to a minute, because I did not look at my watch.

The Attorney General—Then, after dressing, did you go down stairs?

Witness—Yes, with a candle in my hand. It was dark.

The Attorney General—Any sound in the house?

Witness—None.

The Attorney General—Did you listen at your mistress' bedroom door?

Witness—On the left from the house, on the right from the street.

The Attorney General—Did you look at it?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—What did you observe?

Witness—That my master's ulster was hanging up in its usual place.

The Attorney General—You are positive that it was in its usual place?

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—Would you recognize the ulster again?

Witness—Most certainly; it is a coat of a very peculiar pattern.

The Attorney General—Is this it? (Ulster produced.)

Witness—Yes.

The Attorney General—Was the prisoner's hat hanging in its usual place?

Witness—No, it was not there.

The Attorney General—Did you look at the street door?

Witness—Yes, I heard something. I remained in the passage on the second floor, leaning over the balustrade, and it seemed to me to be a very long time before the prisoner made any movement. I should say five or six minutes passed before I heard him, very, very softly, leave the stairs to the first floor. Perhaps I was fainting, through being alone so long in my own room; but the silence in the house and then the sound of my master coming up the stairs much more quietly than was usual with him made me nervous. I don't know why. I fancied all sorts of things.

The Attorney General—Never mind your fancies. Did you hear any other footsteps besides those of your master?

Witness—I am not sure. I can't say. It never entered my mind that anybody could be with him, and yet I could not help fancying things. To speak the truth, I was so upset that I went into my own room and locked the door. I listened with my ear at the bedroom door, and I heard the handle of the door of my mistress' room being turned.

The Attorney General—And then?

Witness—I was already partially undressed, and I went to bed.

The Attorney General—Did you sleep soundly?

Witness—No. I woke up suddenly with the idea that the street door had been opened and closed again. I lay in bed frightened, but hearing nothing more presently fell asleep again.

TECUMSEH, MICH., NOV. 3 1887.

A PROCLAMATION.

By the President of the United States.

The goodness and the mercy of God which have followed the American people during all the days of the past year claim their grateful recognition and humble acknowledgment. By his omnipotent power He has protected us from war and pestilence, and from every national calamity; by His gracious favor the earth has yielded a generous return to the labor of the husbandman and every path of honest toil has led to comfort and contentment; by His loving kindness the hearts of our people have been responsive to every impulse of benevolence and patriotic endeavor and by His unerring guidance we have been directed in the way of national prosperity.

To the end that we may, with one accord, testify our gratitude for all these blessings, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, do hereby designate and set apart Thursday, the 24th day of November next as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by all the people of the land.

On that day let all secular work and employment be suspended; and let our people assemble in their accustomed places of worship and with prayer and songs of praise give thanks to our Heavenly Father for all that He has done for us, while we humbly implore the forgiveness of our sins and a countinuance of His mercy.

Let families and kindred be reunited on that day; and let their hearts, filled with kindly cheer and affectionate reminiscense be turned in thankfulness to the source of all their pleasures and the Giver of all that makes the day glad and joyous.

And in the midst of our prosperity and our happiness let us remember the poor, the needy and the unfortunate and by our gifts of charity and ready benevolence let us increase the number of those who with grateful hearts shall join in our thanksgiving.

In witness whereof I have set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, this twenty-fifth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven, and of the independence of the United States one hundred and twelfth.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

By the President:

THOMAS F. BAYARD, Sec. of State.

THE N. L. FARMERS' CLUB.

The club with a large delegation of visitors, met at the residence of Jas. Updyke, on the evening of Oct. 26th. After listening to the literary program the discussion of "hired labor" question came up and was handled without gloves for nearly two hours. Your reporter can only give a faint synopsis of what was said:

W. B. Keyser opened with a paper. The question "can farming be made profitable with hired labor at present prices of labor and produce" is not does it pay, but can it be made to pay. The argument that I shall advance is that it has and can, because if their were no profit from a common days labor, whether that labor be performed by the farmer himself, or hired, we could not live as we do and prosper as the farmers of Southern Michigan do, which is purely an agricultural section. Industry will be applied to capital, (according to Webster your farm is your capital,) as every one enjoys the advantages of his labor and capital. The savage's capital is his bow and arrow, and he only goes to work for more capital when he learns that he can exchange his bow and arrow for a rifle with the proceeds of his labor; thus man's desire increases for capital in ratio to his knowledge of its advantages. The forest that is capable of supporting a few tribes of Indians can be made to support millions by the aid of labor. From the United States census of 1880 we find the average cash value of farms, equipments, per acre in Michigan, was $28.87; now deducting the first cost, $1.25 per acre, we have the net increase of $27 62 the result of the application of labor. Not only this, but look at the cities, villages, public buildings, railroads, etc., that Southern Michigan has produced because you must admit that it all came from mother earth, directly or indirectly. You may say that I am not dealing with the question, but if a man is running for office, or on trial for crime do they not look into his past record even to the second generation. Now in regard to the present. I think for for us farmers of this vicinity, that mixed farming pays best, mixed with hired labor too. The low price of wheat and comparatively high price of beef, pork, mutton and wool, would be an argument for raising more corn, oats and hay and less wheat, and it is equally true that they should never be sold of the farm except in the form of beef, pork, mutton and wool. Raise as many kinds of stock as you can and keep well, as then you will be [illegible] will bring a good price. It perchance you should have more feed than stock at good prices rather than inferior ones at less price—I do not mean by this to invest in fancy stock at fancy prices—and when you come to sell remember that it is the buyer's business to buy as cheap as he can. Avoid too sudden changes in your farming, that is to "sell short" when one product is low and invest in another at high prices. To illustrate I will take sheep, and the example will apply equally as well to other stock, only perhaps at different periods. Three years ago some farmers sold their entire flocks at most any price, thereby killing the goose that had been laying the golden egg, and now some of those same farmers are buying back some other for the old one. There has been one exception to this rule, and that is in wheat as the price has declined the average has grown larger. Now in conclusion, look out for the little affairs, the rails rotting in the grass, the boards of the fence or building, the noxious weeds going to seed, the tools laying exposed to the elements are small affairs at one time, but if neglected will draw heavily on the pocket book. Better hire than to let such work go undone, remembering that it is poor practice to refuse to hire good help when needed, but if hired to do your part of the work it is poor economy. True thrift is to put the spare dollars where they will grow or come back with interest. Be industrious and economical, but do not work so hard that you cannot find time enough to read and keep posted about your business, for if you do, some sharper will come along and fleece you out of more than enough to hire a part of your work done even at present prices of labor and produce. If we could employ 100 men we could get rich, but on our small farms we have but from one to four men's labor and many times our own to make a profit on, yet there is made from two to three hundred dollars gross on each man employed. Farmers pay thousands of dollars for education of their children, interest on debts, luxuries, etc., and make the money on their farms.

H. Wilson: At present prices, if we hire all our work done the crops would not pay the expense. A man cannot afford to work for less than one dollar a day and farmers cannot afford to pay that. Let us hope the good time is coming when we can.

J. N. F. Bowen: I have been working my farm on the co-operative plan, that is giving a share of crops, and here are some figures that I have:

LABOR,	DR.
To 12 months work@20	$240 00
" 4 teams @ 20	80 00
Board of same	128 00
	448 00
LABOR,	CR.
By 60 bu. wheat,@75	$45 00
" 40 " " potatoes @80	32 00
" 400 " corn@15	60 00
" 15 acres wheat on ground	40 00
" 120 " Oats@30	36 00
" 1200 bundles cornstalks	30 00
	243 00

Now if a man can't make wages working our land on shares how can we hire him and make it pay.

Geo. Swartz: My experience is that I can make more working land on shares than by the day or month. Have noticed that men with families working by the day, just about came out even at the end of the year; and men working land on shares made a little something besides a living.

W. S. Osborne: I keep a man and manage to pay him. We are not willing to live and work as our forefathers did. We make our own hard times. You go into our barns and you find from one to four buggies and they all cost money; ("Sotto voce" and some are not paid for.)

F. W. DePuy: I think we do not want to kill ourselves by working too hard. If we have a man we can make every foot of soil pay something.

A. Welch: I think the older farmers made more from the rise of land than by farming, which we younger ones can't do. Land is too high to farm it on now and make it pay the interest on the money.

W. B. Keyser: Have let some land this season, but it would have paid me better to have hired it done. You speak of the good "old times" of 10 or 12 years ago; but you have forgotten that you sold wheat in '79 for 75cts., hay for $5.00, hogs for $2.25 in '78 and wool in '76 for 25cts; from this we would infer that the poor prices you speak of now were partially imaginary.

A. Derby: Our farms do not depreciate as other property does, and when the boom comes they steadily advance.

The committee on program reported for the next meeting, which is to be held at J. F. N. Bowen's, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 9th, the following:

Violin Solo—President Bowen.

WOMEN AS EVANGELISTS.

A Pastor's Views of the Subject.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The article of Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, in the number [illegible] of evangelical work, is most excellent, and more important than excellent. It speaks right out in meeting on subjects of vital and intense interest. The world is suffering terribly, and thousands in every country are going the way of wrong and ruin for lack of evangelical agencies, for lack of hearing the gospel and seeing it practically illustrated in the lives of its teachers. Our evangelists are men, but the world is men and women. No great and good work of a moral and religious nature is done by men alone, and it can not be done as well as it ought to be. Men are not equal to women in many things the world needs. Woman was the last made, and made as the complement of man—made to complete man—and made, also, with quicker and stronger evangelical sensibilities. With equal opportunities, woman is the better evangelist.

The great mistake of the ages is that the world has been trying to be saved by men alone. The woman element, the power and work are needed as much in the church home as the domestic home; as much in evangelical work as in domestic work.

Since the Lord opened the great modern crusade against liquor, by calling women to work in her own way, there has been more effectual work done for temperance than in all the ages before. Fourteen years of woman in this work has been worth more than all time before without her. The world never saw such an awakening as we now have on the subjects of temperance and prohibition, and we all cheerfully confess that we owe it chiefly to women. Men work better and are worth more with women by their sides. Our temperance men were never so broad, direct and powerful as now that they are quickened by woman's co-operation. And if we had 200,000 more women at work in this cause, the force of men would be quadrupled, and the force of each man would be greatly augmented.

Since woman has entered into literature, it has greatly improved. Since woman has become a teacher, education has rapidly advanced, and the schools have become the third estate of the world.

Men have been running their governments without women, and they themselves admit that they are full of blundering, weakness and corruption. Let women in with broom and duster, mop and dishcloth, and the house of politics would be a cleaner place in a short time.

Yes, Mrs. Henry is right: women are needed in evangelical work. After more than forty years' labor in the Christian ministry, I have to confess that all this time I have felt and seen that the work of the Master is losing immensely for lack of women in its evangelical work. This is the greatest lesson the church has to learn. Speak out, dear women, quickened by the Master; He needs you, and is calling you to His work.

OBITUARY.

Departed this life at her home in Pratt, Kansas, Oct. 23, 1887, Frances Elizabeth Hanford, beloved wife of A. Hanford, formerly of Tecumseh. The deceased was born in Cazenovia, N. Y., Jan. 13th, 1839. She came to Michigan with her parents in 1849 and settled in Manchester, Washtenaw Co. where she lived eight years. She then moved to Prescott, Wis. where in 1859 she was married to Mr. James B. Parkhurst. His health failing they removed to Omaha, Neb., where he died in July 1869. She was thus left a widow with three children, one of whom died in infancy. The other two survive her, Miss Grace Parkhurst and Mrs. Edith Lamkins, of Franklin. The same year of Mr. Parkhurst's death his widow came to Tecumseh and has ever since made it her home here until last spring.

In October, 1881 she was married to Mr. Abraham Hanford. Last March they removed to Kansas, and settled in the city of Pratt. After a brief illness with typhoid fever, Mrs. Hanford died at her home in Pratt, on Sunday, Oct. 23d. The remains were brought to Tecumseh accompanied by her husband and daughter and the funeral services took place from St. Peter's church on Wednesday afternoon following, of which church she and her children were faithful and consistent members. The Masonic Lodge of Tecumseh, of which the bereaved husband was a past master attended the services as an escort as a mark of their esteem and sympathy.

The services at the church were conducted by her old pastor, Rev. J. Phelps and the body was duly consigned to the earth after the rites of his church. The deceased had made many friends here and her husband had been for many years one of our most widely known and respected citizens. The community will deeply sympathize with him and the remaining members of the family in their bereavement.

SLATER.—At his home in Tecumseh, on the 5th of Oct., 1887, Henry I. Slater, aged 86 years.

The deceased was born in Huntington Co. N. J., on the 24th of May, 1801, where he resided until 1824, when he removed to Seneca Co., N. Y., and from there to Tecumseh in 1830, 6 years before Michigan was admitted to the Union. In 1834 he purchased of the territorial government, the farm in Franklin, now owned by B. [illegible] with whom he lived to celebrate his golden wedding and who still survives him. He served in the Black Hawk and Toledo wars, and was actively interested in many early events of this locality.

About 20 years ago he suffered a paralytic stroke from which he never fully recovered, and many of the infirmities of old age, among them almost total blindness, saddened the later years of his life, and made death not only an undreaded but a welcome messenger. Thus one by one are passing away. Those honored ones whose strong willing hands transformed a region of unhealthy marshes and unbroken forests, into one of the finest counties of our beautiful state. A country second to none in heart and civilization is the fruit of the labors of those pioneer heroes—for were they not heroes who faced the unknown dangers, savage tribes, and malarial diseases of the territory of Michigan? Tenderly we commit them to their [illegible] day break and the shadows flee away."

A pedestrian in the opera house at an early hour last Tuesday morning, would have supposed that the HERALD office had been transformed into an agricultural implement warehouse. Plows, grindstones, cornshellers and other et cetera ornamented the side walk and attracted the admiration of the passer by. We are now selling $15.00 plows for $5.00, cornshellers at one half off, and have knocked the bottom clean out of grindstones, as we sell them at 80 per cent off and deliver them free. Farmers should hand in their orders early before the stock is exhausted. Halloween is responsible for it all.

The "Chaffs" are a little disappointed at their reception at Adrian last Friday. They went down in response to an invitation, but no Adrian team appeared to play them. There were also members of the Wolf Creek team in the city, but no arrangements could be made for a game. As no Lenawee team seems disposed to meet our sluggers on the diamond in a fair game, it is in order to call the Chaffs the champions. If any other club doubts their ability to hold this title, it is at liberty at any time to meet the Chaffs and get scooped. Wolf Creek or any other nine can make arrangements for a game with the Hudson Chaffs' regular nine by appointment, letter, telegraph or telephone.—Hudson Post.

Ex-Sheriff Bidwell was in the city recently. He is not as well "larded" as when he run the brick boarding house, at the corner of Winter and Railroad streets. He says however, that he is in excellent health. "Going to run for Sheriff next fall?" asked a reporter of the popular ex-officer. "Not any for me. I may run from one. That will be all the run I will make." —Adrian Press.

The young people of the M. E. church will hold a necktie and apron social at the residence of B. F. Reynolds on Friday evening, November 11. We believe this is something out of the usual run of socials, and it promises to be a unique affair. The young ladies of course furnish the ties and wear the aprons, and after the innocent young man is inveigled into buying a tie he goes in search of the apron that matches it and if his search is successful he is furnished with a needle and thread and made to hem the garment, which is left unhemmed for that purpose. The young man that does the best job is awarded a prize. The ties will be sold for 25c. each, including supper.

Mrs. Myron Conklin has gone to Megarryville, Ind., for a few weeks visit to her sister, Mrs. T. E. Webb.

We are indebted to M. P. Brown for a late copy o the Day County, Dakota, HERALD. It is an eight column folio paper and a spicy, well edited sheet. Newspapers have the "get there" in towns.

Some of our Tecumseh young ladies are good pedestrians. Last week Monday morning, Lillie E. Brown walked to her school in Franklin, four miles west. On Friday evening she closed the fall term with an exhibition. An admission fee of ten cents was charged and the receipts amounted to $6.00. The house was crowded and the scholars all did very finely. After a vacation of two weeks, Miss Brown will commence the winter term in the same district.

Rev. Sam Jones said in his address at Chautauqua: "Nine high license preachers in America out of every ten are high license because nine-tenths of their members are high license members. No preacher can voluntarily, without constraint, be a high license preacher, until he can reconcile Jesus Christ, his risen Lord, and whisky. I say before any man can put a price on this liquid damnation and say, 'You may sell it for that,' he's got to reconcile Jesus Christ and this fearful traffic. Sometimes a man is not afraid of his members, but sometimes a fellow gets where he is afraid he will hurt his party.  I owe my allegiance to Jesus Christ. I will be true to him if the inquisition shall run again, and I am tied at the stake to burn. I would rather laugh in the flames like Cranmer and Ridley, and go home to God a true man, than to walk this earth lashed about by party interest and made to vote with an interest that debauches and damns this country, and breaks the heart of every true wife and mother."

We clip the following from the Day Co. Dakota Herald, published at Webster:

Every business, from that of tract dispenser to solicitor of railroad right-of-way, has been represented in Webster at sometime during the year that is now nearing its final end. Each business has been represented by a traveling expert whose business it was to expound to our citizens the good qualities of the commodity which he was selling. Most of these human advertisements cost the manufacturers and wholesalers, whom they represent, a handsome commission, but still the profits to the manufacturers and wholesalers have grown very materially by the outlay. If the goods sell better and more readily to the retailer by being advertised by a human advertisement that eats, drinks and and comes high, is it not also true that with a proper and judicious expenditure for printer's ink the retailer can enlarge and extend his sales and thus increase his profits? This question can be best answered by accompanying the merchant, who uses a liberal quantity of printer's ink, to the bank where he keeps his "boodle" and there look over his bank account. And yet printer's ink costs very little when compared with the cost of a traveling salesman, but how few use it.

November ends the Wide Awake year with a thanksgiving number in all but the technical sense. Besides the long stories that come to an end—there are none beginning; next month is the time to begin—there is rich and varied fare. "Baked Beans" and "Brown Bread" were little twin negroes, to whom befell as strange an adventure on Boston Common as if they were winged fairies; all of which is related in as jolly a little story as ever was told—by Edward B. Payne. Jessie Benton Fremont describes a visit to Hans Anderson at his home in Denmark; and those brief four pages are full of delightful history. The Luck of Edenhall gives occasion to an illustrated sketch of the real Edenhall, the manor-house in England. There are pictures of the Hall, in the lawn, in the park, the church, an old cottage and Eden bridge. Pictorial Concord comes to an end with its old houses and many mementos of patriotism and genius. The year has been a rich one. We look with expectation—What can the new year bring to surpass it! But we have a hint in the Premium List, a wonderful document. We never saw such a list, so generous handling of generous things! Let every family send five cents to D. Lothrop Company, Boston, for a sample copy, if only to get that list of good things to be got for a little neighborly work.

WEDDING BELLS.

On Thursday evening last at the residence of C. A. Slayton's residence on Pottawatamie street, was the scene of a very elegant wedding party. The groom was John L. Richards, son of Alex Richards Esq., of Raisin, and the bride was Miss Inez M. Laing, of Palmyra. At four P. M. the contracting parties took their places beneath a Cupid's bow and arrow, supported by Mr. Will Hayden and Miss Albe Rice. Rev. W. H. Babbitt then tied the nuptial knot in his usual happy manner to the presence of about one hundred assembled guests. A season of hand shaking and congratulations followed and then a beautiful repast was served, to which the company did ample justice. The "crowd," as the circle of intimate friends to the bride and groom styled themselves, are lavish in their esteem in a beautiful clock and silver tea set. Many other useful presents testified to the regard entertained for them by other friends. After supper, the Tecumseh City Band, of which the groom is a member, appeared at the mansion and rendered the company a serenade. The boys were invited within and received their full share of the leaves and fishes, after which a delightful evening was passed in music and mirth. The bride, although a resident of Palmyra, spent her school days in Tecumseh and is a graduate of our High School. The groom is so well known here that he seems almost like one of our own "boys." At the close of the evening's festivities, the happy pair proceeded to the home of Alex. Richard in Raisin, where they began at once the practical duties of housekeeping. The groom will teach the McLain school this winter and next spring he will assume the management of both his father's and grandfather's farms. It is many a day since a more auspicious wedding has taken place in Tecumseh, and their many friends will extend to them a hearty God-speed as they embark upon life's matrimonial voyage.

A WEDDING RECEPTION.

At Mr. J. H. Bramble's cosy residence on Chicago street last Thursday evening, the usual order of matrimonial parties was subjected to a pleasing change. On Wednesday morning, at Spring Lake Mich., Mr. Clement H. Bramble led his bride to the altar, Miss Nellie E. Heath, at her father's residence. After a bountiful breakfast, the happy pair took the train for Tecumseh, arriving here on the same day, and the following evening, a reception was held in their honor at the residence of the groom's parents. About eighty guests assembled and a happier social gathering has not been held in Tecumseh in many a day. A beautiful array of gifts cheered the hearts of bride and groom, among which was a deed of forty acres of land from Mr. Bramble. The refreshing of the inner man was bountifully provided for, and a delightful evening was passed until the approach of the "wee sma' hours" admonished the guests to depart. The bride is a stranger among us. "Clem" is a favorite in Tecumseh and those who know him best feel confident that he has made a wise selection. The parties will begin housekeeping at once in their own home in Franklin. Kind words and good wishes are showered upon them at the outset of their matrimonial voyage. May the choicest temporal and spiritual blessings fall to their lot, both here and hereafter.

THE HALLOWEEN ENTERTAINMENT.

The entertainment given by the Library Association last Monday evening was something new in these parts, but proved to be a very successful and enjoyable affair. The principal feature of the program was the grand march by a procession of ghosts. The line must have contained nearly one hundred animated sheets and pillow cases and as they marched about the room to the music of the band they presented a decidedly cheerful appearance. The City Band were present during the entire evening and furnished many choice selections. A few burlesque tableaux were presented that took down the house. A few songs were given also, the cap sheaf being the one in which the stealers stole silently away. Mr. P. S. McKinnon read an essay on the origin and observance of Halloween. He had evidently been cultivating the muse Thalia, and his personal allusions were very entertaining to the crowd if not to the victims. It was a lucky thing for him that he was protected by the official robes of his office. The refreshment table was well patronized during the evening, which yielded a goodly income. The receipts of the evening amounted to the snug little sum of thirty dollars. We hope the Library Association will feel stimulated by the success of this initial entertainment, to give our citizens a series of similar ones during the season.

Postmaster Wyman, of Riga, has resigned. He abdicates in favor of August Glaser, who will doubtless receive the appointment.

DEATH E. J. WALDBY.

At an early hour on Monday last Mr. Ebenezer J. Waldby died suddenly at his home in the city of Adrian. He had returned the previous only three days before from a trip in the south-west. He was prostrated by sickness on this trip and hastened home an account of it. The following biographical sketch is taken from the Times.

Mr. Waldby was born in Coopers-town, N. Y., August 17, 1820, and was consequently a little more than 59 years of age. In 1846, accompanying his brother, Hon. W. H. Waldby, he came to Adrian, taking a position in the office of the Watchtower, which was published at that time by his uncle, R. W. Inksells. Shortly afterward he learned telegraphy, and was soon appointed superintendent of the Morse telegraph lines, radiating from Cincinnati. This position he resigned in 1857 to engage in the banking business in this city with his brother. From 1878 to 1880 he followed the same calling in partnership with Ira Bidwell, at St. Paul, when he again returned to Adrian, entering, as a partner, the firm of W. H. Waldby & Co.

Subsequently he was the cashier and a director in the First National and State Savings banks, joining with Frank W. Clay, in 1878, in the purchase of the business of the latter institution, and organizing the firm of Waldby & Clay, which still continues in existence. May 3, 1855, he was married to Emeline S. Backus, by whom he had three children, Harry B., William G., and Mrs. Nellie A. Pollasky. All of these, as well as his wife, survive him.

Ebenezer J. Waldby was one of Adrian's best citizens. A life of strict integrity, of uprightness and fairness has ended. Few men who have lived in this city carried with them to the grave more respect and esteem than the one who left us this morning.

The funeral obsequies were held at his family residence yesterday afternoon and were largely attended.

CONFESSING CHRIST—MATT. X. 32-42.

Notes.—Who shall confess.—The Greek Aorist [illegible] to speak together [illegible] the same [illegible]

[illegible] Not so [illegible] Christ [illegible] Master [illegible] spirit daily [illegible] Shouting and [illegible] peace but a sword. The angel sang peace, [illegible]

[illegible] ence between outward and inward peace. Sin and holiness are in a perpetual conflict. The gospel is aggressive. So the Christian is commanded to fight; but to fight the successful fight he must have the peace of God in his heart that passes all understanding, the peace of full assurance that he is right. The sword is the two-edged sword of truth (Heb. iv. 12.

"He that doth not take his cross."—A reference is made to the Roman custom, that obliged the crucified to carry his own cross. We are apt to forget that the cross is the symbol for death, and all cross bearing is perseverance even to death.—"A prophet's reward."—The reward the prophet gives. Many illustrations of this are to be found in the Old Testament.

"A righteous man's reward."—Which is a holy character "without blemish and unreprovable." Also the satisfaction that comes with the sense of spiritual fullness. Comp. Matt. x. If thousands are hoot to death as with enthusiasm over Gladstone, who is magnificent, but without humanity, how much greater the enthusiasm, and how much deeper it should be over one who has done all for all, the divine Christ. Nor is it a mere outward, passing demonstration that is demanded, but the serious, Christ-consistent life that testifies of an overwhelming love for the Master.

Christian manliness consists in the quiet, unassuming, [illegible] resisting power to evil. It is the [illegible] for Jesus at all times and [illegible], perhaps, the hardest part of our Christian life.

True love can never be doubted, but sometimes the sinner wonders if he does love Christ. This is sad, but not unnatural to the inquirer. The proved love to Christ is obedience to Him. This is final: "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments."

Some people stumble over the thirty fifth and next verse in our lesson. Would any one get out of parties because it causes divisions in families? Christianity is a deep, overpowering conviction, and must never be sacrificed for anyone's opinion. Of course in the household opposition must come into the closest conflict. Last Friday morning our citizens were startled when a telephone message from Ypsilanti to Frank Brown stated that Esquire McDongall was in a critical condition from the effects of gas escaping in his room the night before. Frank, accompanied by Hattie McDougall, at once started for his bedside. By prompt and persistent attention he was resuscitated and so far recovered as to be brought home Sunday. While it is not positively known how it occurred, the supposition is is that he turned the gas off before retiring, and some time in the night, went to light it; fell before lighting it, for it does not seem possible so great a reader as the Esquire is, would blow it out. Be that as it may, it was a very close call, and had he not fallen on his face he would have been suffocated. He has nearly recovered from its effects.

Mrs. J. Tucker of Detroit is visiting at D. H. Silvers.

Mrs. John Sanborn of Port Huron, visited her father, Rev. W. P. Wastell the last part of the week.

Joseph Jackson now occupies the house lately vacated by Lib Pomeroy and Mrs. Halpin has moved into the one Mr. Jackson has occupied.

Monday night a company calling themselves The Boston Ideal Co., presented Uncle Tom's Cabin to a large audience at Town Hall, judging from the reports of reliable people it was a snide company—not equal to many amateurs. It is a shame that such a company as the real Boston Ideals have to suffer at the hands of such brazen impostors.

Prof. C. H. Charles occupied Sebarks building Wednesday with his Golden Temple of Art and Music. It is a wonderful piece of mechanism and ingenuity a large number availed themselves of the opportunity to see this piece of art.

The Episcopal social will be held next Tuesday afternoon at Mrs. Emmett Allen's. A way will be provided [illegible] cordial invitation is extended to all.

Tuesday night a large number of people from Manchester and this place gathered at Geo. Rawson's to see the burning at the well. In the afternoon when at a depth of 270 feet the gas threw water, gravel, etc., high into the air. It ignited readily and burned steadily, at times the flame being very high. The water is very strongly impregnated with salt. Many brought quantities away, with them. It is causing great excitement and hope that it may prove to be like unto the wells in Ohio. Geo. proposes to have it fully developed.

A. B. VanDeMark is adding an office to his place of business. He has long felt the need of one.

W. W. Demuth is changing the skylight in his store.

Miss Wilson of Dundee, visited Mrs. Morris Kelley last week several days.

Some of our sportsmen went to Bridgewater, Monday, in search of something to shoot.

It is possible that some of the parents of the little fellows in the village are not aware that the W. C. T. U. have a Band of Hope organized, and that it is under the supervision of Mrs. F. E. Pocklington, and that they meet once in two weeks on Saturday afternoon, at Mrs. Pocklington's home and spend an hour reciting and reading. MACON CENTER.

Beautiful weather and farmers are improving it in closing up fall work in fall plowing.

J. W. Slaight and wife of Lodi, Seneca Co., N. Y. are here at present visiting their many relatives and friends.

A lively and interesting game of base ball was played last Saturday afternoon on the grounds of the Macon Center club, between the first and second nine, which resulted in a victory for the first. The game started very evenly, there being nothing to score for either side the first innings, after which the first got the lead and kept it to the end of the game. The best of feeling prevailed, the second nine doing nobly for the little practice they have had. At the end of the game they bravely challenged the first for another game next Saturday with the understanding that one or two changes to be made in favor of second nine. Challenge accepted.

Macon Grange will meet in special session on Friday the 11th inst., at 1 o'clock P. M. All members requested to be present.

MACON MUSIC.

On Monday evening of last week a large gathering of friends and neighbors met at the residence of James Lindsley for the purpose of giving him a birthday surprise. It was not a perfect success, however, it being a bright moonlight night, he saw them collecting together and making the usual preparations for all to come in suddenly upon him. The refreshments were passed and an enjoyable time spent all the same.

Will Lindsley and his bride spent last Sunday at Mart Stickley's.

Mr. Austin went to Ann Arbor last week to have his foot amputated, it has been troubling him for some time.

School has been closed for two weeks on account of scarlet fever; two cases of it in the place.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

Lesson for November 13.

CHRIST'S WITNESS TO JOHN. MATT. XI, 2-15.

NOTES.—"Now when John heard in the prison."—Luke places this occurrence after the Sermon on the Mount. John's followers kept him well informed of the doings of Christ. This was possible in such an Eastern prison. Josephus states that he was confined on the east side of the Dead Sea, in a fortress called Machærus. This particular prison was not a building erected for that special purpose, but probably a part of the house in which judges of some officials lived. John had some freedom. Any one could at least communicate with him.——"By his disciples."—Not "two of his disciples." Perhaps the very ones that brought him the news of the "works." John was worn out and despondent though not faithless. His disciples may have shared the same depression of spirits. He wished a positive statement from Christ to confirm their faith as well as strengthen his own convictions.——'And Jesus answered.'—He performed some miracles before them and then pointed to his works as the strongest proof of his Messiahship. It was not a strict answer, but was positive proof.——"The poor have good tidings."—A fulfillment of the prophecy concerning the Messiah.—Verse 6 is an oriental way of impressing the lesson. John could not fail to understand what he meant.——"A reed."—The reed that grows in Palestine is a slender stalk growing from five to eight feet high. It has long leaves and can easily bend to the wind.——"Clothed in soft raiment."—This indicates the effeminate character of a man unfitted to the hardship and self-sacrifice of a bold prophet. Such a man would not be found in the desert any way, only in a luxurious house.——"More than a prophet."—He was last of the old dispensation prophets, the first of the new; the herald of the coming of our Lord.——"He that is but little in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he."—He was greater than those who had gone before; not less than those that followed, for the latter are the Kingdom of Christ. John was only on the threshold. This "little" or "lesser" refers entirely to his official position in the Kingdom.——"This is Elijah."—All Jews believe, in the actual reappearance of Elijah the Tishbite as the forerunner of the Messiah. It was ingrained in their customs and lives. Yet there was an unwillingness among the people to believe this to be the Elijah of old. The revelation of the truth was, as it is always, only to those who diligently sought the truth.

INSTRUCTION.—No wonder John was despondent in his prison house. His work was over. Another even greater than he has stepped into his place and more than filled it. Yet his interest never abated in the progress of the work. Above all things he wanted to be assured of the fitness of the worker again. When satisfied, he was ready to go. There are many who have begun noble reforms or have engaged in other means for advancing the Kingdom. They should not be despondent when their active service is over. Let them take the same interest, encourage those who take their places, and above all be sure that those who succeed them are worthy to minister in Christ's name. The test of their work is the conversion of souls.

Perhaps John was impatient because Christ did not blaze out in the full glory of his Messiahship. Things were going too slowly for him. Impatience is often manifested by the best of men who begrudge the time it takes for people to be converted. Sometimes they are apt to blame the Lord. This indicates a lack of faith. The cure for this is to do one's whole duty conscientiously and prayerfully and leave the result with him.

There is no doubt John faltered in his faith. Was not this partly due to his environment? But note Christ's gentleness in dealing with him. There is much wavering in these times. Tenderness may help matters. Let Christ's gentleness be so magnified in our lives, that no sharp, jagged word may have a chance to creep in.

Generally there is no use in arguing with unbelievers. Point to the works. Christ to-day in the Church, in the slums, among the mission fields. It is especially important to have some works of one's own, not to speak about, but which speak for themselves.

John was a burning and a shining light. Each one had better be polishing himself up with God's truth this week, so that like the looking-glass he may reflect the light that has come to him from above.

SEVERAL HEAVY FAILURES.

The Liabilities Footed Up Into the Millions.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—Isadore Comfeld, the feather merchant, has made a deed of trust of all his real estate for the benefit of his creditors, also a deed of trust of his personal property and business assets for the benefit of a portion of his creditors. Mr. Comfeld is ill with mental trouble, and the deeds are made in order to protect the property from threatened attachments and demoralization. Bradstreet's reports Mr. Comfeld's affairs to stand roughly as follows: Assets—Cash, $125,000; real estate, $650,000; stock, $[illegible], accounts, $60,000; total, $970,000. Liabilities—Mortgages, $[illegible]; due for merchandise, $[illegible], due banks and contingent liabilities, $500,000; total, $[illegible]. Surplus, $2,7[illegible]

The failure of I. B. Rosenthal at St. Louis, and Ackerman Bros. at San Francisco, with whom paper had been exchanged, were only part of the causes leading to Mr. Comfeld's embarrassment. Trade has been poor and prices declining. He was the largest feather manufacturer in this country, and had branches in London and Paris.

Two Bad Failures in Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 5.—Hess, Mayer & Co., wholesale dealers in ladies' and men's furnishing goods, filed an assignment at noon Friday. Simultaneously Henle & Wolf, wholesale dealers in hats, assigned. Both are prominent firms. Hess, Mayer & Co. have liabilities to the amount of $450,000, and the debts of Henle & Wolf will reach $100,000. The assets of either firm will not be over one-third of their liabilities. The members of these firms are related by marriage to members of the firm of Lapp, Goldsmith & Co., whisky brokers, who failed a few weeks ago for $400,000. The firms that went under Friday were heavy indorsers for the whisky men.

NEW HAMPSHIRE LEGISLATURE.

Governor Sawyer Vetoes a Bill and Adjourns the Assembly.

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 5.—Governor Sawyer sent to the house Saturday morning a veto of the bill entitled "An act regulating freights and fares on railroads, and to provide for compensation to dissenting stockholders in cases of railroad leases." The original bill to regulate fares and freights, he says, would meet his approval, but the meritorious part of the present bill is made a vehicle to carry legislation which in substance re-enacts the Hazen bill, already vetoed. In the house a motion to lay the governor's veto on the table was voted upon, but it was found that there was no quorum present. In the senate a motion to pass the bill authorizing the Boston & Lowell, or Boston & Maine to lease the Northern railroad over the governor's veto was lost. The governor finally adjourned the legislature at 11:20 a. m. No action has been taken by the house in the reports of the judiciary committee on the bribery charges. The veto message of the Hazen bill lies on the table.

CHARLES H. SAWYER.

THE BAND BEGAN TO PLAY

At Governor Hill's Order, and Stopped a Panic at a Political Meeting.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Nov. 7.—Governor Hill addressed a large mass-meeting of Democrats in the opera house Saturday night. Just as he began speaking there was a loud crash in the building, as a portion of the gallery gave way. The people all jumped to their feet and started into a wild panic. Ladies fainted and men commenced fighting for a chance to escape. In the upper gallery from 100 to 200 men were piled up in front of the main exit and for a moment or two a wild panic prevailed. For one brief second the governor seemed appalled at the danger which threatened the audience, but he stepped quickly to the front of the stage and attempted to reassure the people. He could not make himself heard, and seeing this he made a signal to the band to play. This had the desired effect and the audience was soon quieted.

GOV. HILL SPEAKING.

TYPHOID FEVER IN INDIANA.

Great Mortality Caused by Low Temperature and Bad Water.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 5.—Reports to the state board of health from different sections of the state indicate an unusual amount of typhoid fever as a result of the low temperature and bad water during the summer. In many counties the mortality reaches from 33⅓ to 8 per cent. of the cases reported. In Wayne, Randolph, Elkhart and Elkhart counties the disease exists in epidemic form and appears to resist all the usual remedies. At Milton, Wayne county, the wells are all dry or so nearly so that the water is unfit for use, and the people are hauling the water they use for drinking purposes. There have been fifty cases of fever in the village, and the mortality is greater than ever before known. In many of the southern towns and country neighborhoods the people are hauling water from five to ten miles, and in some sections the regular selling price is 30 cents per barrel. The poorer classes, who depend upon this for their water supply, are compelled to use the water sparingly, and it frequently becomes stagnant, and, of course, unhealthy. In these sections the prevalence of fevers is general and the mortality unprecedented.

CORRIGAN'S BRUTALITY.

THE NOTED HORSEMAN FELLS A RE-

And Then Proceeds to Kick Him Into Insensibility—What Caused the Trouble—Brutal Murder of a Demented Youth by

KANSAS CITY, Nov. 5.—Pat Corrigan, the noted horseman, distinguished himself Friday by felling a reporter to the ground and subsequently administering a brutal kicking to the prostrate unconscious man. Thursday The Times printed a report of a fight between two well-known dogs known as Paddy and Modero. The story was written by a reporter named Thomas A. Mosier, who, in the course of his description, stated that the trainer of Modere bore a strong resemblance to Pat Corrigan. This statement excited the ire of the famous horseman, whose brother Pat Corrigan is, and it is said the former, on reading the article, declared his intention of taking the first favorable opportunity of avenging the fancied insult to the Corrigan family.

KICKING THE REPORTER.

Friday morning Mr. Mosier, the reporter, went out to Waldo park in the interest of his paper to report on the condition of Corrigan's string of racing animals, quartered at that place. He inquired for the noted sportsman, and, accompanied by a friend named Bell, walked over to where Corrigan stood. By way of explaing his purpose in visiting the stables he said: "Mr. Corrigan, my name is Mosier, and I represent The Kansas City Times."

"The devil you are," ejaculated the horseman, and without another word he struck the newspaper man a stunning blow in the face, felling him to the ground. Mr. Mosier is of rather small stature, while Corrigan, as is well known, is a tall, heavy man. The disparity in size and weight, however, did not seem to suggest forbearance on the part of the infuriated horseman, who proceeded to kick the prostrate man several times. Mosier was knocked insensible by the blow and subsequent kicks, and did not recover for some time. On regaining consciousness the reporter was conveyed to the city, where a physician examined him and found that besides other serious injuries his jaw was broken. He is now at the Sisters' hospital, in charge of a physician.

The above statement of the encounter is furnished by Mr. Bell, who accompanied Mosier to Waldo park. Bell is vigorous in his denouncination of Corrigan's conduct. Whether Mosier will take any legal steps against Corrigan is not known.

A BRUTAL MURDER.

A Demented Youth Killed by His Drunken Step-Father.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—Michael J. Beisler, a demented youth of 17 years, was brutally murdered Thursday night by Albert M. Brusstar, his step-father, at his home, 1,003 Fawn street. Brusstar is a letter carrier, about 35 years old. According to the story of the murdered boy's mother, Brusstar came home drunk. He ordered Michael, to whom he has always shown an implacable hatred, to leave the house. The mother defended her son, whereupon Brusstar threw her to the floor, and pushed Michael out into the hall at the head of a flight of narrow and steep stairs. "I'll put an end to you," Brusstar exclaimed. The demented boy begged for mercy, but Brusstar picked him up and hurled him over the balustrade. The boy's head struck the floor with great violence. Brusstar then ran down stairs and furiously kicked the prostrate and probably unconscious boy, and left the house. The mother of the injured boy carried him up-stairs and tried to revive him, but he was dead.

Think Scott Has Suicided.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—The friends of David Scott, of Vernon Bros. & Co., who disappeared on Tuesday last leaving behind him an overdrawn account and $70,000 in improperly indorsed notes, have formed the opinion that he has committed suicide. He was heard from last on Thursday at Niagara, where he purchased a ticket for the other side. He has not been heard from on the Canadian side, and he left his watch and wallet at the hotel in Niagara.

Charged with the Murder of Frank Harn.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 5.—Frank Harn, uncle of the Frank Harn recently found dead in a carriage on a freight car at Chicago, charged the two men, James Simons and Scott Coates, already in custody, with the deliberate and malicious murder of his nephew, Frank Harn, on the night of Oct. 23, in Allegheny county. The detectives who have been working the case have no doubt of the guilt of these two men.

A Murderous Blow with an Ax.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 5.—Isaac Arnold was attacked by Thomas Newsome, his father-in-law, Thursday night in the vicinity of Gray's Chapel, Coffee county, and seizing an ax he struck Newsome a blow that cut him almost in two. Newsome had been drinking, and assaulted Newsome with a stick.

FIRES AND OTHER ACCIDENTS.

An explosion Monday forenoon in the Atlantic dynamite works, near McGinnisville, N. J., wrecked one of the packing-houses and instantly killed four men.

One of the mills of the American Cotton-Seed Oil company at Cincinnati was destroyed by fire Monday afternoon, the loss reaching $100,000, with heavy insurance.

A furious gale raged throughout England Tuesday, causing considerable damage to telegraph wires and resulting in a number of minor casualties. The storm prevailed around the entire coast of the United Kingdom, and the list of maritime disasters is large. Seven vessels were wrecked at Cardiff docks.

Henry Miller's two little children were burned to death at Oakland, Neb., Tuesday. The parents were not at home and the little ones set the house on fire.

At Chester, N. Y., the house of William Wade, a railroad man, was burned early Thursday. Wade's wife perished in the flames. Suspicion has been aroused and the coroner is making an investigation.

Property valued at from $160,000 to $170,000 was destroyed by fire at Nashville, Tenn., Friday. During the progress of the flames a number of people were injured by falling walls.

Rheumatism

Is undoubtedly caused by lactid acid in the blood. This acid attacks the fibrous tissues and causes the pains in the joints, knees, ankles hips, and wrists. Thousands of people have found in Hood's Sarsaparilla a positive cure for rheumatism. This medicine, by its purifying action, neutralizes the acidity of the blood, strengthens the whole body.

Result of a Man Emptying His Pipe in a Keg of Powder.

WHEELING, W. Va., Nov. 5.—A keg of powder exploded in a miners' boarding-house at Maynard, Ohio, five miles east of this city, Thursday evening about 8 o'clock, and of the five men in the building at the time two were fatally wounded and the remaining three very badly burned and mangled. None of them are in a condition to give any very intelligent account of the matter, but from the circumstances surrounding the case it seems that after the men had eaten their supper they gathered around the fire in the building to smoke and chat. In a half an hour or so one of the miners emptied the contents of his pipe in a keg of powder, and in an instant there was an explosion, which left the building a total wreck and scattered the men for a dozen yards around. Fritz Richler and Julius Huchholz were fearfully mangled and torn, and their death is but a question of a few hours. Jacob Kessler, John Elkas, and Henry Leber, the remaining three, are not fatally hurt, but are in a pretty bad way. All were residents of this city.

How to Reduce your Expenses.

You can do it easily, and you will not have to deprive yourself of a single comfort; on the contrary, you will enjoy life more than ever. How can you accomplish this result? Easily, cut down your doctor's bill. When you lose your appetite, and become bilious and constipated, and therefore low-spirited, don't rush off to the family physician for a prescription, or on the other hand, wait until you are sick abed before doing anything at all; but just go to the druggist's and for twenty-five cents get a supply of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. Take them as directed, and our word for it, your unpleasant symptoms will disappear as if by magic, you will have no big doctor's bill to pay, and everybody interested (except the doctor), will feel happy.

Connecticut people are famous for making a stir in the world, and the land of Steady Habits is not to lose its reputation immediately at any rate, for one of its residents has just invented a new kind of bustle.

The gleanings of years, thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing infirmities peculiar to females, as the burden of hope and support that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has proved a vast experience in successfully treating and thoroughly curing diseases of the delicate organism, testify.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of years of hospital practice and private experience. Thousands of testimonials received from physicians, mothers, wives, daughters, and others, have poured in, unsolicited, and unsought for, testifying that they have found it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the entire system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, suppressed or suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

CHAPTER VI.

DESCRIPTION OF THE LAST DAY'S PROCEEDINGS—EXTRACTED FROM A DAILY PAPER.

"The trial of Edward Layton for the murder of his wife came to a singular and unsatisfactory termination late last night. That the public interest in the case had reached an almost unprecedented height was proved by the large number of persons who were unable to obtain admission to the court.

"On the previous evening the evidence for the prosecution had closed, and there was a painful and eager expectancy in the minds of all present as to the line of defense which the prisoner intended to adopt. This line of defense—if indeed it can be called a defense—was as surprising as it was brief.

"The prisoner, addressing the judge and jury, intimated that it was not his intention to call witnesses on his behalf. Most of the witnesses for the prosecution, he said, had given their evidence fairly, and if they had committed themselves to misstatements and discrepancies, it was more because they were either misled or mistaken—in the case of one witness, Ida White, because she was strangely prejudiced against him—than that they had a desire to make the case against him even blacker than it was. It had happened before, and would doubtless happen again, that a man found himself thrust into such an unhappy position as he himself stood through no fault of his own, and that he was unable to say or do anything to prove his innocence. Sometimes it was with such a man a matter of honor, sometimes a matter of conscience. In his own case it sprung from both his honor and his conscience that his lips were sealed, and the utmost he could say for himself was that he was an innocent man, with so dark an array of evidence against him as to almost incontestably prove him to be guilty. All that he could do was to declare most solemnly that the accusation upon which he was being tried was false, and that he stood before them as unstained by crime as they were themselves. What could be said truly in his favor was that his character, and to some extent his blameless life, were a refutation of the charge. Evidence of character was generally called in mitigation of impending punishment. He did not intend to call such evidence, because, by so doing, it would be a half admission that he stood there a guilty instead of an innocent man. He knew perfectly well how lame and impotent these weak words must sound in the ears of those who were sitting in judgment upon him; but this he could not help. It was but part of the fatal web in which he was entangled. That he and his wife had lived unhappily together was not to be disputed; but even in this most serious crisis of his life he denied that it was arrogated by the legal profession to open a man's private affairs to the vulgar gaze which, for his purpose to the vulgar gaze which, he should be hidden from it. That he had done, he said, even if he had been at times the peril in which he stood, was forcing other persons into the case, and to allow them to be blackened and villified as he had been. 'I am scarcely guilty,' said the prisoner, 'what your verdict will be. Were I in your place I should most likely decide as you will decide, but none the less will it be a solemn fact that, though you are loudly right, you are morally wrong. I must be content to let the case rest as it has been presented to you, and to abide the issue, though it may cost me my life.'

"Never in a criminal court, in the case of a man arraigned upon so grave a charge, has there been heard a defense so weak and strange; but it is nevertheless a fact that the prisoner's earnest and, to all appearance, innocent manner produced a deep impression upon all who heard him, and when he ceased speaking there was, in the murmurs of astonishment that followed, an unmistakable note of sympathy.

"After a slight pause the attorney general rose to sum up the case against the prisoner, and his incisive judicial utterances soon dispelled the impression which the prisoner's earnestness had produced. He said that in the circumstances of the case his speech would be briefer than it otherwise would have been. He had a duty to perform and he would perform it, without, he hoped, any undue severity or harshness. Unhappily the evidence was only too clear against the prisoner, and unhappily the prisoner had [illegible] against the case against himself. This was not a matter of sentiment, it was a matter of justice and justice must be done. With slight hesitations, caused with [illegible] the prisoner throw a veil of silence around himself to cast suspicion upon them by some kind of mysterious implication which no person could understand and not yet [illegible] to give them a [illegible] indignant denial—with slight hesitations, then, the prisoner had admitted the truthfulness of the evidence [illegible] him. As he proceeded to these doubtful points in the evidence, he would leave himself do so and endeavor to clear away any latent doubt if such existed, in the minds of the jury. First, with respect to the letter. The prisoner did not deny that he wrote this letter on the whole of the day his coachman, John Moorhouse, was drawing him to various places, and it was only upon his arrival home at midnight that he endeavored to shake the coachman's evidence as to whether, when he entered the carriage, upon leaving Prevost's restaurant and upon his issuing from the carriage when the coachman drew up at his house, he still had his sister on. What his motive was in endeavoring to shake the coachman's testimony upon this point it was impossible to say. He (the learned counsel) had most carefully considered the matter, and the only conclusion he could arrive at was that the prisoner was anxious to instil a doubt into the minds of the jury, that it was not he who left the restaurant at 11.50 and entered his carriage, and that it was not he who alighted from the carriage and opened his street door. But supposing, for instance, that this ar-had done with himself between 11.50 on the night of the 25th of March and 7 o'clock on the morning of the 26th? Surely some person or persons must have seen him, and had he produced those persons there which it would be the duty of every one engaged in this case seriously to consider. Indeed, he would go so far as to say that, admitting such evidence to be brought forward and established, there could not be found a jury who would convict the prisoner of the charge brought against him. It would, at a more early period, have been proved that the prisoner had not seen his wife from 11 o'clock on the night of the 25th of March until 7 o'clock on the morning of the 26th, and as it was during the night of those days that the unhappy lady met her death, it would have been impossible to bring the prisoner guilty. But, easy as this evidence must have been to produce, there is not only no attempt to produce it, but in his immediately impassioned speech the prisoner does not even refer to it. In his mind, then, and in the minds of all reasonable men, there could not be a doubt that this was the cry of one who, in despair, was catching at a straw to save himself. The learned council touched briefly but incisively upon every point in the evidence concerning which the prisoner had maintained silence and had made no endeavor to confute. For instance, there was the lady whom he met in Bloomsbury square, whom he took to Prevost's restaurant, whom he regaled with a supper which neither he nor she touched—a distinct proof that they were otherwise momentously occupied. The evidence with respect to this lady is irrefragable. She was no shadow, no myth, no creation of the imagination; she was a veritable being of flesh and blood. All the efforts of the prosecution had failed to trace her, and the just deduction was that she was somewhere in hiding, afraid to come forward lest she might be incriminated and placed side by side with the prisoner in the dock. The prisoner did not deny her existence, nor that she and he were for several hours in company with each other. Were he innocent what possible doubt could exist that he would bring her forward to establish his innocence? Were both innocent, would not she of her own accord step forward to prove it? The prisoner in his address made certain allusions to honor and conscience, by which he would make it appear that he was guided by his honor and his conscience in the singular method of his defense; and it may be that there existed in him some mistaken sense of chivalry which induced him to do all in his power to screen the partner in his crime. It would have been better for him had he brought his honor and his conscience to bear in the unhappy engagement into which he entered with the unfortunate lady who afterward became his wife; but it had been amply proved that the marriage was not, on his side at least, a marriage of affection. Distinctly he married her for her money, and distinctly he would be a great gainer by her death. Thus, then, there existed a motive, and not a novel one—for the tragedy has been played many times in the history of crime—for his getting rid of her. He the counsel of the prosecution did not wish to press hardly upon the prisoner, who was a man of culture and education and must feel keenly the position in which he stood, whatever might be his outward demeanor. But it devolved upon him to impress upon the jury not to allow any false sentiment to cause them to swerve from the straight path of duty. They must decide by the evidence which had been presented to them, and it was within a feeling the reverse of satisfactory that he point out to them that this evidence could lead to but one result.

"The summing up of the learned judge which, with the attorney general's speech, will be found fully reported in other columns, was a masterly analysis of the evidence which had [illegible]. He expressed upon the jury the necessity of calm deliberation, and of absolute conviction before they pronounced a verdict. Circumstantial evidence was, of all evidence, the most perplexing and dangerous. It had, in some rare instances, erred; but these exceptions were happily few and far between. It had, on the other hand, led to the detection of great criminals, and without its aid many heinous [illegible] would slip through the hands of justice. He dismissed the jury to their duty and he prayed that wisdom might attend their deliberations.

"At 5.30 o'clock the jury retired, and it was the general [illegible] that they would be called within the hour. The prisoner sat in the dock, shading his face with his hand. Not once did he look up to the court. He seemed to be preparing himself for his impending fate. Six o'clock, 5 o'clock, 6 o'clock passed and the suspense grew painful. It was clear that there was not that agreement between the jury which all the court, judge and the prisoner, had expected. At 6.30 the foreman of the jury [illegible] the court, and [illegible] the jury [illegible]

"Is there any point of law upon which you require instruction?

"The Foreman of the Jury—None, my lord.

"The Judge—Is there any disagreement in the evidence which the jury desire?

"The Foreman of the Jury—None, my lord. [illegible]

"The Judge—Then I [illegible] the jury [illegible]

"The Foreman of the Jury—We are agreed, my lord, [illegible] the prisoner [illegible] dates, and [illegible] the jury [illegible] whether [illegible] had [illegible] toward [illegible] murdered.

"The Judge—And the jury—None, my lord. [illegible] possible chance of the jury [illegible]

"The Foreman—[illegible] that no prisoner in court [illegible] more surprised than the prisoner, and when the jury were called in and discharged by the judge from their duties, Edward Layton, before he was removed from the dock to the cells, leaned eagerly forward to scan their countenances.

"Nothing further transpired, and this unexpected chapter in the Layton mystery was closed."

PART THE SECOND.

THE CABLE MESSAGE FROM AMERICA.

"At 10 o'clock on the night following this exciting day Mr. Bainbridge, Q. C., and his friend Dr. Daincourt were chatting together in the dining room of the lawyer's house. They had met by appointment, and were now conversing over the strange incidents of the Layton trial.

"'Its termination,' said Dr. Daincourt, 'is in harmony with the whole of the [illegible] be no further disagreement on the part of the jury, and that his conviction is certain.'

"'With the evidence as it stands at present,' said Mr. Bainbridge, thought-

[illegible]

But there is here a mystery to be brought to light which, discovered, may lead to a different result. Almost unfathomable as this mystery now appears to be, its unravelling may, after all, depend upon a very slender thread. Fortunately, Layton's second trial cannot take place for a month. Before the month expires I hope to be able to lay my hand upon evidence which will prove him innocent of the charge.'

"'To judge from his attitude,' said Dr. Daincourt, 'he is indifferent as to the result.'

"'You are mistaken,' said the lawyer; 'it is only that he will not owe his release to certain means which I believe it to be in his power to disclose. Has it not occurred to you that he has been anxious all through to keep something in the background?'

"'Yes,' replied Dr. Daincourt, 'that has been my impression; but it might be something which would more firmly fix his guilt. Is it your intention to follow up the case?'

"'To the last link in the chain.'

"'The chain, if there be one, is safely hidden, and I cannot for the life of me see a single link.'

Mr. Bainbridge, leaning back in his chair, did not reply for a few moments, and then he said:

"'I have two links to commence with. One of these is shadowy; the other is certain and tangible.' And then, with the air of a man whose thoughts were engaged upon an important subject, he exclaimed, 'If I could only discover its meaning!'

"'The meaning of what?'

The lawyer took a pack of cards from a drawer and selected a card, which he handed to Dr. Daincourt.

"'The nine of hearts,' said the doctor.

"'The card,' said the lawyer, 'that was found in the pocket of Layton's ulster.'

"'Is this your tangible link?' asked Dr. Daincourt, turning the card over in his hand.

"'It is my tangible link,' replied the lawyer.

Dr. Daincourt shrugged his shoulders. "'You are adding mystery to mystery.'

"'I think not,' said the lawyer. 'You were not in the court when the nine of hearts was produced.'

"'No.'

"'That and the latch key of Layton's street door were the only articles found in the pockets of the ulster. When the evidence relating to these articles was being given, I closely observed Layton's face. I knew, but he did not, that these two articles were all that were discovered in the pockets of the incriminating coat. When the latch key was held up he smiled faintly, he was not surprised. But when the nine of hearts was produced there flashed into his eyes a startled look—a look of bewilderment and astonishment; indeed, there was something of horror in his face. I needed no further sign to make me positive that he had no previous knowledge of the card, and that it was the first time he had seen it.'

"'Something of horror, you say.'

"'It was my impression, and I cannot account for it. Not so with his bewilderment and astonishment. To my mind they are easily explained.'

"'He asked no questions concerning the card?' remarked Dr. Daincourt.

"'He asked no questions,' said the lawyer, somewhat irritably, 'concerning a hundred matters upon which the witnesses should have been hardly pressed. Can you not see that this accentuates my conviction that the nine of hearts is a link in the chain?'

"'Yes, supposing you had not already arrived at a false conclusion with respect to poor Layton's knowledge of the possession of the card.'

"'I will stake my life and reputation,' said the lawyer, earnestly, 'upon the correctness of my conclusion. I will stake my life and reputation that, until that moment, poor Layton did not know that the card was in his pocket.'

"'Then somebody must have placed it there.'

"'As you say, somebody must have placed it there.'

"'But in the name of all that is reasonable,' exclaimed Dr. Daincourt, 'what possible connection can you trace between a playing card, whether it be the ace of clubs or the king of spades, or the nine of hearts—it matters not which—what possible connection can you find between such a card and the awful charge brought against Layton?'

"'That,' said the lawyer, drumming upon the table with his knuckles, 'is what I have to discover. You do not know, doctor, upon what slight threads the most important issues hang.'

"'I think I do,' said Dr. Daincourt, with a smile.

"'I refer not to the general issues of human life,' said the lawyer, in explanation, 'but I refer to cases, especially to criminal cases, in which the ingenuity of man is exercised in the fabrication of evidence. Once [illegible] the most [illegible] and [illegible] by a [illegible] and [illegible] from [illegible] very jaws of death.'

"'And the case of hearts is such a case, I [illegible],' said Dr. Daincourt, in a [illegible] manner.

"'[illegible] You may depend I shall [illegible]

"'[illegible] two links,' said Dr. Daincourt, 'you have shown me that [illegible] to be a case [illegible] What [illegible] the prisoner [illegible] the card?'

"'[illegible] the prisoner [illegible] the card.'

"'But it is not proved at present that the prisoner [illegible] the jury [illegible] and law [illegible] the prisoner [illegible] the card.'

"'I have [illegible] purposes,' said Dr. Daincourt.

"'I,' said the lawyer, 'have positive information. Eleven of them declared him guilty, only one held out that he was innocent. Arguments, persuasions, logical inferences and deductions, a recapitulation of the evidence against him—all were of no avail in this one juryman's eyes. He would not be convinced; he would not yield. He had made up his mind that the prisoner was innocent, and that he, at least, would not be instrumental in sending him from the dock a felon.'

"'I can see nothing in that,' said Dr. Daincourt.

"'There are,' continued the lawyer, 'in civil and criminal records, instances of a a like nature, some of which have been privately sifted, with strange results, after the cases have been finally settled. I recollect one case which may bear upon this of Layton's. I do not say it does, but it may. It [illegible]

a barbarous length of time without being able to come to an agreement. There was no possible doubt, circumstantially, of the prisoner's guilt; the evidence was conclusive enough to convict twenty men. The prisoner, however, was not guilty, and that person was on the jury. The prisoner was tried again and unhesitatingly acquitted. During the time that had elapsed between the first and second trials additional evidence was found which proved the prisoner to be innocent. The juryman who held out in the first trial happened to have been some years before a friend of the prisoner, a fact, of course, which was not known when the jury was empanelled. After the result in the second trial he publicly declared that he had been guided by his feelings and not by the evidence.'

To Be Beecher's Successor.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—It is virtually settled that Rev. Charles A. Berry, of Wolverhampton, England, is to be called to Plymouth church as its pastor. The advisory committee of the church having charge of the subject of a successor to Mr. Beecher met Thursday evening and unanimously voted to recommend the selection of Mr. Berry. While this does not bind the church, there is little doubt that the choice of the church committee will be ratified, inasmuch as the sentiment of the church is strongly set in the same direction—so strong, indeed, that the committee's action is virtually dictated by the universally expressed desire. Mr. Berry sailed for England last Wednesday.

A County Seat Election Results in a Prompt Resort to Arms.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 5.—Gray county, Kansas, is wildly excited over the result of the recent election for choice of county seat as between Ingalls and Cimarron. The latest figures are: Ingalls, 755; Cimarron, 556. Charges of ballot-stuffing are freely made. The ballot-boxes have been removed to the upper story of the Cimarron bank and armed men are guarding them. The building is barricaded with bales of hay and ladders have been laid side-long on the stairs to prevent access to the boxes. An armed party of Ingalls sympathizers has arrived at Cimarron and serious trouble is feared.

WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH THE

A Lecture Before the Society of Ethical Culture of Chicago, in Grand Opera House, Monday, October 23.

BY WILLIAM M. SALTER.*

There is no more sacred thought than that of justice. With the sense of its august nature I do not wonder that men have committed its vindication to the supreme powers that rule the world. We believe, however, that justice is the task of man; that the supreme powers have intrusted it to man; that a portion of individual [illegible] and the judge. The divine institution in the world is not the Church but civil society; hence no apology is needed when real religion, which is nothing but the sense of justice, mingles in civil affairs. If the churches that look for justice and judgment from another power and in another world have no need to trouble themselves about earthly courts of justice, not so with us. If we do not continually speak, it is because we assume that justice is being continually done, and our duty lies only in supporting and encouraging those through whose hands it is administered and executed. But our courts are not infallible, nor does a divinity hedge and attend them in such a sense that their every verdict must be submissively received. Occasions may arise—at rare intervals, we must presume at least in modern democratic societies—when justice is not done. My friends, there are grave doubts in many minds whether such an occasion has not recently arisen in our midst. No man who honors the law and loves his country can, without some trepidation publicly question the righteousness of a judicial verdict, rendered after a long trial and reaffirmed by a higher court. We must presume that as a rule justice is done in our courts, else anarchy is near, to being justified. It is with a full sense of my responsibility, and of the misinterpretation to which I render myself liable that I speak on the question I have announced for to day. What shall be done with the anarchists?

Let no one expect from me a sensational treatment of this theme. I am not here to appeal to any one's passions or prejudices, or even sympathies. My thought is justice. Justice requires before all things a cool and dispassionate mind. In such a spirit, with such an aim at least, I have for days and weeks studied this question. It is largely a question of facts, of dry facts, if you will. The discussion of them may be tedious to some. Very well, I am here before all to speak to those who want to know what the facts really are.

I shall make my remarks under three heads: First, are the seven men now in the county jail guilty of the crime with which they were charged? Second, if not, of what are they guilty? Third, what should be their punishment?

First—are they guilty of the crime charged against them? My hearers will certainly pardon my familiarity in the use of names for the sake of clearness and brevity—on this occasion a familiarity which under other circumstances would be quite out of place. The crime was that of the murder of the policeman Mathias T. Degan. It is "conceded," to use the language of the Supreme Court of the State, that no one of the seven men threw the bomb with his own hands; they are charged with being accessories, in the technical language of the law, before the fact. An accessory of a crime is one who stands by and aids or abets or assists, or who, if not present, has yet advised and encouraged its perpetration, and by the law—and it is surely a just law—such an accessory is as guilty as if he were the actual perpetrator. What is the proof that the seven men were accessories in this case?

There is no doubt that a conspiracy was formed Monday night—the night before—the massacre—to resist the police in case the striking working men of that excited time were attacked. There is no doubt that Engel and Fisher—two of the seven men—were leaders in that conspiracy, nor any doubt worth considering that Lingg—another—was acquainted with its designs. Lingg with others, was manufacturing bombs intended for the next day, he chided his assistants for working so slowly; he said they were for use that night. There can be no reasonable doubt, taking into account that dynamite bombs were the trusted weapons of warfare to this particular class of workingmen, and further the special evidence produced at the trial, that these particular bombs were made—thirty to fifty of them were made—to serve the purposes of the Monday night conspiracy. Plans were also made Monday night for the Haymarket meeting the following night. [illegible] evidence that a [illegible] market. That contingency was in mind, but the plan was simply that the conspirators should come to the assistance of workingmen, wherever they should be interfered with. That Monday afternoon several working men were reported to have been killed by the police near McCormick's factory, a circular calling on working men in passionate terms to arm themselves and avenge the death of their brothers was distributed at the Monday night meeting and doubtless tended to heighten the angry feelings of those present, but there is no evidence that an offensive attack on the police was planned for—the evidence is simply that the conspirators were to be ready to resist any attack of the police. The [illegible] planned for on the following night. Its purpose was to denounce the police for shooting down workingmen the day before. A handbill had been widely circulated, written by Fischer, calling on workingmen to arm themselves and appear in full force. There can be little doubt that had the policemen appeared in the early part of the evening and attempted to disperse the meeting, there would have been slaughter in their ranks far more fearful than that which actually took place later—fearful and ghastly as that was. But the meeting, according to the testimony of the Tribune reporter, who was there all the time, was a peaceable and quiet one for an outdoor meeting. The Mayor was present so as to personally disperse it in case it assumed a dangerous tendency, but left it late in the evening, stepping into the neighboring police station on his way home to say to Captain Bonfield that nothing had occurred or looked likely to occur that required interference, to which Bonfield replied that he had reached the same conclusion from reports already bro't to him. But for the violent harangue of Fielden, who spoke after the Mayor had gone, the police would probably never have descended on the scene, and the bomb would not have been thrown. And by that time the leaders of the conspiracy had left the meeting, the gathering had dwindled to a third or quarter of its original size, a threatening cloud had caused a motion to be made to adjourn to an adjacent hall—and if Fielden had allowed himself to be interrupted in this way, it is likely that the meeting would have closed without any incident whatever. As it was, Fielden protested in answer to the summons of the police to disperse, "we are peaceable;" but to no purpose, as in a trice the infernal missle went flying through the air.

Who were the accessories to this crime? For the thrower of the bomb is unknown. There can be no doubt considering all the evidence, that the bomb was one of those made by Lingg, and that, according to his own statement, it was made for service ("fodder," as he expressed it) against the capitalist and police. He may not have known it was to be used at the Haymarket; but he made it for service, immediate service, he made it in furtherance of the purposes of the conspiracy which met Monday night. If any one is guilty as an accessory, plainly he is. Fischer was drinking beer in a neighboring saloon when the bomb was thrown and Engel was regaling himself in the same way at home. Both had left the meeting, apparently anticipating no trouble. It is possible that neither of them knows who threw the bomb, that both of them regretted the throwing as a foolish thing, when they heard of it, though we have evidence only that one did; but that it was thrown by a member of the conspiracy of which they were leaders, there can be scarcely any doubt, certainly no reasonable doubt, and that as leaders they are responsible for the act of their fellow-conspirator, done at their instigation, though not at just the time and place which they might have chosen, there can be no reasonable doubt either. Fischer had called on workingmen to come to the Haymarket meeting armed—and "armed" meant in the circle to which he belonged, as much armed with dynamite as with revolvers—he had objected to another proposed place of meeting for Tuesday night, reason was "a mouse-trap," which could mean nothing if violent resistance was not contemplated as a possible contingency. It was he who caused the word Ruhe to be placed in the Arbeiter-Zeitung Tuesday afternoon, which was a signal to the conspirators agreed upon at the Monday night meeting, and which summoned them to assemble and arm themselves; and he was himself found the next day with a loaded revolver and ten cartridges, a file, and a fuse or fulminating cap on his person—and the use of the cap in connection with dynamite bombs he confessed to have learned from reading Most's book on the Science of War. The other leader, Engel, had given a detailed description to workingmen on the North Side only a few months previous as to how bombs were made, and recommended to all those who could not buy revolvers to buy dynamite; in his speech in court, he allowed that he had said in there would be an end of capitalistic rule; and he it was who proposed the plan to the Monday night meeting of throwing bombs into the police stations and shooting down the policemen as they came out, so as to prevent their going to wherever the conflict might be, between other policemen and strikers, which was contemplated as a practical certainty in the near future and to meet which the conspiracy was formed. This plan was not carried into effect, probably owing to the fact that the police interfered with the Haymarket meeting so late at night and after all apprehension of trouble had gone from the minds of the conspirators, and, probably too, because after all the conclusion was in half and half minds that the conflict that was to precipitate all this terrible tumult and bloodshed did take place, and there can be scarcely a doubt that it took place owing to the incitement and instigation of the two leaders I have named. Engel and Fischer and Lingg are beyond a reasonable doubt, accessories to the Haymarket crime. It is perfect folly to urge that the police had no right to disperse the Haymarket meeting, even if it had no right, no one in the crowd had a right to respond with the murderous weapon, so long as no violence was used against the crowd—the remedy for the offenses of the civil authorities as for other offenses lies in the courts. Further, it is quite evident that the class of people to whom the conspirators belonged regard almost any hindrance to their actions by the authorities as an invasion of their rights; even if striking workingmen are employing violence against those who take their places, they allow no right of the police to step in and restrain their violence and preserve peace—that the call, forsooth, taking the side of the employer against the strikers, a most arrant bit of nonsense! The rage that inspired the notorious "Revenge" circular to which I have referred was all excited because the police interfered to protect peaceable, inoffensive workingmen who had taken the place of strikers at McCormick's factory against a lot of ruffians who attacked them with bricks and stones and sticks, interfered and in the melee fired at some: such rage I call arrant humbuggery and the now notorious circular was nothing but blatant bombast and was itself a confession of sympathy with crime.

FARMERS' UNION.

Friday evening, Nov. 4th, the Farmers' Union held a pleasant and interesting meeting at M. Davidson's.

In the absence of some expected to take part in the program, Miss Bernie Waring gave a recitation—The Candidate—a good piece, well spoken.

Misses Lena VanNess and Louise Brown also favored the audience by singing "Just of Old."

The select reading—Ichabod Green—by Mrs. H. J. Williams, was very interesting in itself and rendered doubly so by the manner in which it was read.

Miss Eunice Davidson's essay—Educational benefits to be derived from Chautauqua and like institutions, was pleasing and instructive, giving those who had not visited Chautauqua a glimpse of its beauty and an idea of the many opportunities there offered to one seeking knowledge.

Will Wilson sang—Poor Old Dad—a pathetic piece picturing to one's mind the scene where an old gray haired father and mother are driven from home by their son. The accompaniment to this song and also an instrumental solo, by Miss Vina Underwood were as usual, well played.

After an instrumental solo by Miss Louise Brown, the discussion of the question was opened with a paper by H. B. Eaton. The question of different soils, crops and seedings is a very interesting one, and of which volumes have been written, and most of us have had a life's experience, yet we do not thoroughly understand it. work sandy loam. I favor fall plowing of sod for oats in the spring. The ground should be well prepared to produce good potatoes. I like to leave plowing for corn late, so as to plant very soon after the ground is prepared. Wheat ground should be well plowed and fitted. Sow timothy seed in the fall, getting it well in the ground, in the following spring sow clover with a drill if the ground will permit. Plaster helps clover some seasons, such as last spring. Clay soil requires more judgment in managing it than sand.

J. Benedict: I agree with Mr. Eaton except fall plowing, which I believe to be more injury to the land than crops would be, and tends to run out the land. Fall plowing causes clay to bake during winter, thus injuring the soil. If sand is plowed in the fall some is blown away and and what remains is injured by the winter.

W. Hopkins: Mentioned an article he had read stating that the soil should not be worked, in the spring and that oats should be sown in Feb. even if there was snow on the ground and with no cultivation.

W. F. Raymond: Fall plowing is of advantage to oats in the spring. I do inches; turn sod or plaster over in the fall for oats in the spring, then turn again and seed to wheat and grass-seed and get the best catch. I do not favor timothy on clay although clover is likely to draw out.

C. Underwood: I agree with Mr. Benedict's views on farming, for my experience has been in mucks with sandy soil, and I find it not best to plow in the fall.

Mr. Schreder: My farm is loam soil with some clay mixed some sand spots. I have had little experience in fall plowing. I plow sod in the spring for corn, oats the next spring and then wheat and seed, and have never lost a crop in 18 years living on my present farm. I do not sow wheat and seed together. I sow timothy about the middle of Oct. and clover in April. The heat in summer is likely to kill clover. I do not favor deep plowing not more than six inches for corn.

F. Davidson: To get good crops, first plow good, and clear to the fences. I prefer clover rather than timothy and clover, but we need timothy when the clover kills out. The two together make good hay, but I prefer natural grass. Orchard grass is best for orchards as it grows under trees and makes good pasture if kept close. I do not plow deep and have had no experience in fall plowing.

The next meeting will be at Albert Waring's, Friday evening, Nov. 18th, when the election of officers will take place.

TEN NIGHTS IN A BAR ROOM.

This great moral drama will be presented at the opera house on Wednesday, Nov. 16th, by Leech & Stevens' excellent company, with special scenes and effects. Mr. Ogden Stevens, late leading support to Clara Morris, will be seen in his sparkling comedy creation of the young New England farmer, "Sample Swichel." Mr. Stevens' characterization of the Yankee, is a departure from the conventional stage Yankee with long hair and big crowned hat. He is a bright young fellow of the present day, clean cut as a diamond. The only great child actress, Baby deCastro, should be seen by every lady and child in her wonderful portrayal of little "Mary Morgan." In conjunction with the company is the Brooklyn Quartette, who will intersperse the play with their glees and melodies. The Grand Rapids Telegram-Herald of Oct. 15 says: "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" was produced at Power's Grand Opera House last night for the first time in many years. The sterling old temperance drama is well played by the Leech & Steven's Dramatic Company, Ogden Stevens making a hit in that old time Yankee character, "Sample Swichel." Baby de Castor is a great favorite with the audiences and deservingly so. The piece drew an immense balcony and dress circle audience, and it is likely that the matinee this afternoon and the performance to-night will see large gatherings. Ten Nights in a Bar Room is the strongest temperance lecture ever written.

Our people again sleep soundly to the sound of the oil well machinery. The water has been successfully shut off by casing, and the hole is dry. The drill is making twenty or thirty feet progress per day. The rock is limestone, and quite hard. Of course, there is a possibility of entering another stratum of water rock at any time, but if we do the Bryan well for a pattern, the hole will be dry till oil or gas is reached. Hudson Post.

With the current number of The Century Magazine begins its eighteenth year and thirty-fifth volume. As usual the November number is especially notable. Great value and, at this time, wide popular interest attaches to Mr. Kennan's paper on the "The Last Appeal of the Russian Liberals," the text of which, for the first time in English, is included in his article, in fact, the appeal has hitherto not really been published at all. Considering the wide and growing popular interest in Russian life, literature, and politics, Mr. Kennan's series, the result of a special investigation of Russian politics, as seen both in Russia and in Siberia, is likely to create a genuine "sensation." Mr. Kennan says: "It has been my fortune in the course of the last two years to make the intimate personal acquaintance of more than five hundred members of this Russian protesting party, including not fewer than three hundred of the so called Nihilists living in exile at the convict mines and in the penal settlements of Siberia." Mr. Kennan addresses himself first to the discussion of the popular misconceptions concerning Russian politics, one obtaining first of all that there is no such body as "the Nihilists" in the proper sense of the word, and giving a clear presentation of the popular movement for reform.

A STATEMENT.

MR. EDITOR:—We notice in your issue of two weeks ago that your correspondent of Holloway Hash, takes exceptions to a report made in your paper of the week before, said report giving an account of the ball game between the Holloway's and South Macon's. Now, we wish to say that the report referred to was not made by any members of the South Macon club, nor any of their personal friends, but (as they ought to have seen) was given by a correspondent from another locality, and we must say was an impartial, unprejudiced and concise statement of the facts in connection with that game, as we believe no one who witnessed the game would take exception to the report. We take it for granted that the Holloway correspondent was not present and got his information from interested parties, and therefore might be taked with a grain of allowance.

AN OUTSIDER.

Farmers' Insurance Company.

The annual meeting of the Lenawee county Farmers' Mutual Insurance company, was held in Adrian last week. The attendance was unusually large, the ballots taken during the election of officers disclosing a voting strength of 331. There was a lively effort to create a division in favor of Mr. Hamilton, of Palmyra, for secretary, but Geo. R. Allis, as usual came under the wire safely ahead of his competitor. Mr. Allis is a safe careful man and with no disparagement of his competitor, it may be said that the right man is in the right place.

Wm. Brown, of Hudson, J. M. Judson, of Dover, Rufus Baxtt, of Fairfield, Warren J. Holbridge, of Raisin, were elected directors for ensuing year.

A Crysanthemum exhibition will be held at Ann Arbor court house to-morrow. Crysanthemum exhibitions are said to be the latest wrinkle. Why cannot Adrian have a Crysanthemum exhibition. We haven't the remotest notion of what a Crysanthemum exhibition is, but Adrian will not be herself to let a sleepy old burg like Ann Arbor dazzle her on anything of that sort.—Adrian Press.

Our townsman, N. Perkins, is engaged in a rather tedious undertaking. He is collecting material for a history of the Perkins family, which he proposes to issue in book form about January 1st, next. The work will contain about one thousand names, and dates back to the early part of the eighteenth century. He is endeavoring to make this book a perfect record of each family and each branch of the family back to the time Roger Williams was Governor of Rhode Island. —Clayton Journal.

A hollow brick is a new invention, and W. H. Kimball, of this village, is the man who is preparing to manufacture them at his tile yard, in Hillsdale county. The brick can be made three or four times as large as the common brick, are very smoothly faced, and being hollow, will not retain moisture or frost. They will also probably be popular among people who are in the habit of having a brick in the hat. Girls with cold feet, will find them convenient, for a couple of them heated can be put into a bed, and the little dears can put their corn-covered trotters into the hole in the middle. Mr. K. ought to have a success in the brick line.—Hudson Post.

They don't allow prize fights in Morenci, but there is a pitched battle there between Smith Brothers, of Waldron, who are United Brethren sluggers, and Elder Kenyon and Brother, who are the heavy hitters for the Adventists. John Ranger and H. Perry were the seconds, and C. S. Ingals referee and decided all questions of foul, permitting no hitting under the belt of personality. The jaw contest has waged with all the ardor that attends the discussion of a subject of which neither party knows anything, and it has so confused the average Morenciite that he don't know Sunday from Monday, or whether there is any truth left in the bible. —Adrian Press.

The Grangers had a jolly time—which they always have when there's something to eat, as one of 'em remarked—last Wednesday evening in the way of a "county seat" box social. The ladies prepared boxes of provisions, containing enough for two persons and also the name of a county in Michigan. After paying 10c for a box, the male Granger was required to give the name of the capital of the county named in the box, and failing to do so had to fork over an extra 5c for the necessary information. The lady holding the name of the said county seat became his partner for supper. And so the fun waxed animatedly throughout the evening.—Morenci Observer.

On Tuesday D. A. Downer finished shipping about three hundred logs from Jasper to his Morenci mill. Last week Jasper was the scene of some lively and rather exciting work. A number of months since Mr. Downer bought 160 trees there of Chas. VanDoren, but not long afterward an injunction was served, by one who claimed to be an heir to the property, to prevent the trees from being cut down and removed. On Monday week, owing to some legal fault, the injunction was set aside by Judge Watts, and ere another could possibly issue Mr. Downer, with his characteristic energy, had a large force of men in the woods working like beavers to fall and secure the disputed timber. The way that the trees were tumbled down made the inhabitants think a cyclone had struck that section.—Morenci Observer.

Another vein of water with a decided saltish taste, was struck last Saturday, at the experimental well at a depth of about 1,500 feet. Drilling is therefore progressing slowly. The contractor expresses the hope that he may go through the limestone within a few days when he expects not to be further troubled with water. The casing will then be pulled out, the hole rimmed down and the casing replaced, and further investigation proceeded in with a dry hole. Contractor Pierce does not anticipate that he will get rich off of the job, and offers any man a premium to take it out of his hands. He has already expended about $800 for rope and believes if Trenton rock is not struck before reaching a depth of 2,000 feet, his loss will easily foot up a $1,000. And yet we have people complaining because so much money is paid for drilling. The contract is cheap at the price paid.—Blissfield Advance.

The result of Tuesday's elections may be stated in brief as follows: Detroit city goes Democratic by an increased majority.

Iowa elects State officials and legislature [illegible] by reduced majority.

Ohio goes Republican by an increased majority.

Pennsylvania shows large Democratic gains but the State is safely republican.

Virginia elects a Democratic legislature, insuring a gain of a U. S. Senator.

Maryland goes Democratic by the usual majority, State officers and legislature.

Massachusetts goes Republican but by a [illegible] majority.

Nebraska elects Supreme Judge and Regents on Republican ticket.

New Jersey elects a Republican legislature, which is a gain.

New York elects the Democratic City and State tickets by about 20,000 majority. The Republicans hold the legislature.

TECUMSEH & FRANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB.

The meeting of the club on Nov. 2d, at the residence of Chas. Mathews, passed off very pleasantly. There was a good attendance and all who were there to take part in the program came prepared to perform their respective parts.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President—B. Hurry.
Vice Pres.—L. M. Waldron.
Sec. & Reporter—C. H. Bramble.
Treas.—Geo. Swartz.

The committee on program arranged the following for the evening of Nov. 16th, at W. S. Osborn's "Hickory Shade Farm."

LINGG'S DERNIER RESORT.

ANARCHIST'S CELL.

Reasonably Adapted to Blow a Man's Head Off, but Otherwise Not Very Destructive.

Opinion Expressed That They Were Intended for Suicide—Extraordinary Precautions Against Any More of the Same—The Feeling of the Authorities and Movement of Anarchists—A Dynamite Threat from the French Anarchists.

CHICAGO, Nov. 7.—The cells which confined Lingg, Fischer, Engel and Parsons were searched yesterday after Lingg had expired, and the results were published. Sheriff Matson, Captain Black and others, found in the cell occupied by Lingg a wooden box, which was concealed under a pile of blankets in a corner of the room. Inside the box was found a quantity of dynamite, which was in a condition to explode if fired. There was also found there a fuse, which was in a condition to explode if fired. There was also found there. There the officials entered Lingg's cell to make search, while Lingg was temporarily lodged in an adjacent cell, where he watched the officers with eager eyes. He was pale as death, and trembled like an aspen leaf as the search was moved around in the little room he has occupied so long.

Suddenly two of the three officers jumped out into the corridor, while the third man held at arm's length a small wooden box, which he carefully carried to the office of the jail and laid on Jailor Folz's desk. The box contained four pieces of gas-pipe, each about six or seven inches in length, filled with some heavy substance and plugged at both ends. Jailor Folz placed up one of the pieces of gas-pipe, which was closed at one end with a round iron stopper, and was proceeding to examine it when Officer Osborne, who was sitting near by reading a morning paper, stepped forward and, discovering the strange looking box of iron, exclaimed: "My God, Mr. Folz, handle it carefully! That's a bomb!"

Just then Sheriff Matson arrived at the jail and on being told that the dangerous weapons be replaced in the box and sent to a chemist for analysis, the jailor there was no doubt that the four pieces of gas-pipe were veritable dynamite bombs. The search of the other cells was continued, but nothing more of any importance was found. It was decided, however, that it was best to put the Anarchists in new cells, and accordingly apartments on the lower tier of the jail were made ready for them.

No. 11, which is directly in front of the entrance to the jail and behind two rows of iron gratings, in which space three men are on guard day and night, was assigned to Lingg, and the bomb manufacturer was locked up in it with only a bed, table, books and writing material, everything else being taken from him. He had little or nothing to say and immediately upon entering his new cell, sat down and began to write, having kept at work all day until it was too dark to see. All the prisoners except Lingg submitted to the search without displaying the slightest emotion. Lingg seemed greatly moved and showed plainly by his manner that something was wrong. He was not informed of the discovery of the bombs.

Sheriff Matson said in relation to the discovery: "We had no reason to make the search at this particular time. That is, we received no intimation that anything was wrong. It was merely a precautionary measure decided on some time ago. As we selected Sunday as a quiet day when the examination would make less disturbance than if it was made on a week day." The Sheriff says that in view of the developments of the search the most stringent precautionary measures will now be taken. The guard will be increased to three men as much as is ordinary and the number of visitors will be restricted. "If anything of the kind should happen again," said the Sheriff, "we will be prepared to prevent any harm being done. The prisoners will be strongly guarded night and day, and a special officer will watch each of them from this time to the day of the execution."

The news of the finding of the bombs spread like wildfire and caused a reaction of the sentiment which had prevailed throughout the city. Members of the Lyons who had signed the petitions for clemency recalled their names and would have had their names never appeared on the paper.

Yesterday afternoon after the finding of the bombs a conference took place between Mayor Roche and Chief of Police Hubbard, and it was decided that in view of the discovery of the bombs in the jail the execution of the prisoners should be hurried as much as possible. Accordingly the Mayor and Chief of Police visited the jail, and after a conference with the prisoners, Mayor Roche and Chief Hubbard decided that the execution should take place on Friday instead of Monday, as at first intended. The Mayor and Chief of Police then visited the Sheriff and informed him of the decision, and the Sheriff at once set about the preparations for the execution.

Lingg's death was caused by his attempt to blow himself to pieces with a dynamite bomb. The bomb was of the same pattern as those found in the possession of the Anarchists, and was made of a piece of gas-pipe about two inches in length and two inches in diameter, closed at both ends by screw caps. It was filled with a powder which, when the fuse was lighted, would have exploded with great force. The fuse was a piece of ordinary cotton wick, such as is used in lamps, and was about two inches in length. It was fastened to the bomb by a cap which was screwed on over the fuse. The bomb was then placed in his mouth and the fuse lighted. The force of the explosion was so great that the head was literally torn to pieces, the top of the head being blown off and the face being terribly lacerated. The bomb was found between the teeth, which were shattered and broken by the force of the explosion. The bomb was then placed in a box and taken to the morgue, where it was found that the fuse had burned down to within a quarter of an inch of the bomb when it exploded. As a rule antimony or some similar ingredient was used in connection with the explosives so that blood-poisoning was certain to set in wherever a wound was made. The four bombs found in the cell were of exploding material, and would serve the purpose of a gun-barrel. One of the bombs was filled with nails and the other with fragments of iron.

From his knowledge of the methods of making bombs for various purposes Capt. Schaack gave it as his opinion that the bombs found in Lingg's cell were intended for use, not as a means of committing suicide, but for use against the other three, to prevent their escape, and for the purpose of blowing up the jail. The bomb which killed Lingg was made of a piece of gas-pipe, stopped at both ends with screw caps, and was filled with powder, which was intended to explode when fired by a fuse. The fuse was found in the cell, and was made of a piece of

Mrs. Morgan Talks to Doctor Lynch

MANCHESTER, Mich., Sept., 1887.

Dr. Lynch—Do you remember the conversation we had some months ago about my sciatica, and that one of my lower limbs was partially paralyzed from its effects? I asked you about the Swamp-Root you urged me to use that if there was any thing under the sun that would cure me it was that. I commenced using Hunt's Rheumatic Syrup, and I want to say to you that it is the greatest medicine in the world. I firmly believe that dizziness that troubled me as well as the rheumatism is cured, and my blood is in a healthy condition. My appetite and sleep are both good, and I am gaining in flesh. Doctor, that is your family medicine, and you need not hesitate to recommend it.

MRS. THOMAS MORGAN.

ONE GOOD CROW INDIAN.

LIKE SCOTTY BRIGGS' FRIEND, "WHY PARD, HE'S DEAD!"

Gen. Ruger Makes Short Work of the Crow Business in a Day.

Given an Ultimatum and Declining the Same, Opened Upon by the Troops—Sword-Bearer Killed.

CROW INDIAN AGENCY, M. T., Nov. 7.—At 10 o'clock Saturday morning Stung Campbell and Interpreter Tobacco Jake were sent to the Indian village, ordering the chiefs to come to Gen. Ruger, at headquarters. Pretty Eagle, haranguing the camp, and Pretty Eagle, Take's Wounds, Crazy Head, Iron Fork, Dancing Woman, Kearney, Two Belly, and Spotted Horse rode before to Gen. Ruger's quarters. The following parley then took place:

Gen. Frank Armstrong—I have been sent by the great father to settle the trouble. You must give up everything and run over the whole band of the [illegible] Ruger will go back.

Pretty Eagle—We are willing to give up Sword-Bearer, but can't give up the others.

Gen. Ruger—I want all the bad young men. You must bring them by 12 o'clock. [To Crazy Head] I want your boy, too.

Pretty Eagle—We will go back to our camp.

Gen. Ruger—The great father sent me to take the bad young men, and I must have them. They shan't be hurt, but must be punished.

Pretty Eagle—We will go back and talk to the medicine man.

Gen. Ruger—That is all I have to say.

Pretty Eagle and the other chiefs then returned to their camp. The cavalry were drawn up in full field order on the eminence fronting the Indian position. The Indians soon began riding about and singing war-songs.

Campbell returned shortly, saying that a council was being held. The troops were held in readiness, and the Indians were patiently watched by the command until the time was up. The Indians in the meantime had formed into a long line, and Sword-bearer could be seen riding up and down haranguing them. A few scattering shots were then fired into the air.

The time being up, Gen. Ruger sent troops E and K down the valley on the left flank of the Indians, where they were met by about half of the Indians gathered in the war party, which numbered about 150. A red-hot skirmish then resulted; in which Corporal Charles Thompson was killed, Private Eugene Malleoy slightly wounded and Private Clark thrown from his horse and his shoulder dislocated. These were all in troop K, commanded by Lieut. Edwards, and Second Lieut. Byram. A running fight ensued, the Indians retreating, some to the peaceful gathering near the agency, and others crossing the river and taking to the hills. Sword-Bearer made a final stand at the crossing of the Little Horn, about one mile below the agency, in which he and probably three of his followers were killed. This was the result of the skirmish fire of G troop, First cavalry, commanded by Capt. F. Kuppham and Lieut. J. B. Aleshire. Sword-Bearer's body was brought into camp, but the other Indians are only reported dead. Most of the Indians circled about and returned to the agency, mixing with the other camps. There are now supposed to be from twenty to fifty loose in the hill. Several troops of cavalry are now out close on their heels, and they will probably soon be captured. There was about two hours' actual fighting.

WHERE THE BONDS ARE HELD.

All but About $11,000,000 Owned at Home—Suggestions by Rosecrans.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 7.—The annual report of Gen. Rosecrans, register of the treasury, was submitted to the secretary of the treasury Saturday. The report shows with reference to the ownership of our government bonds that at the end of the last fiscal year, June 30, 1887, of the $893,493,312 of government registered bonds outstanding, $11,001,800, or only 1¼ per cent. were held abroad; $212,415,450 were deposited with the treasury by national banks, and $670,076,072 held by individuals, associations, trustees, etc., in this country. Of the latter amount savings banks held $209,000,000, and insurance companies, $55,500,000.

Gen. Rosecrans states that the publication of the report, made by direction of the house of representatives, of outstanding balances due to and from the government has caused some moneys to be paid into the treasury, and shown numerous cases where accounts have remained unsettled for lack a division of balances; charged with hunting up and summing up all balances in final accounts with all persons having money transactions with the government.

He calls attention to the fact that the absence of individual accounts with disbursing officers of the army and navy very largely increases the possibility of such losses as those by Paymaster Hodge, Capt. Lowgage, etc., and recommends that personal accounts be required to be opened and kept on the books of the register's office. He also calls attention to the immense and increasing receipts and expenditures of the postoffice department, and the fact that the supervision of the receipts and expenditures of that department, amounting to upwards of $100,000,000, is laid upon a single auditor.

This is the third attempt to set the several big lumber yards here on fire the past week, the two other fires being extinguished with no loss.

BUSINESS NOTES.

The directors of the Northern Pacific road were Thursday authorized to issue new bonds not exceeding $42,000,000, and bearing interest of not more than 6 per cent.

The session of the Northwestern Butter, Cheese and Egg association closed at Manchester, Iowa, Thursday. Jonathan Bigelow, of Massachusetts, was elected president. The meetings were successful in every particular.

It is stated that John H. Hopkins, dry goods merchant at Evansville, Ind., is financially embarrassed. He has made a mortgage to preferred creditors for $[illegible]. His liabilities are estimated between $40,000 and $50,000.

A syndicate of New York and Philadelphia capitalists have secured control of The New York Graphic, and the paper will continue to be independent Democratic in tone. Col. Frank A. Burr, of The Philadelphia Times, will be the editor.

PROHIBITION IN KANSAS

The most contradictory reports are in circulation in regard to the working of the law prohibiting the sale of intoxicants in Kansas. Indeed, so utterly at variance are the printed statements in regard to this matter, that it is impossible to form any opinion whatever from them. A recent trip through southern Kansas enabled me to make careful personal observations and investigations, the results of which both interested and surprised me. Particularly was I surprised at the prominence certainly in favor of prohibition which my questions in regard to the matter elicited from those who openly gave themselves up to the practice of intemperance.

The doing away with saloons and all the evil which naturally and unavoidably follows in their train, has proven, in emphatic good, and the claim is made that the evil was in the saloons with their infinitely radiating pernicious influences which permeated and contaminated every social interest.

The party with whom I made the trip had arranged to visit Parsons, Winfield, and Baxter Springs, and the first point at which we stopped was Parsons, a town of pretty houses and churches, of between eight and ten thousand inhabitants. This was the first town I had ever been in where there was not a saloon, and as it is the junction of the Missouri Pacific and Kansas Pacific railroads, and the large machine shops of both lines are located here, I looked about with keen interest, for I felt that here was some data which must assist in the solution of an important problem. I was up by daylight the next morning after our arrival and took a long walk about town in the gray of the early morning and gathered my first bunch of Kansas sunflowers, which here are indigenous to the soil, and in their beauty and profusion do justice to Oscar Wilde's encomiums of them. Altho' I looked for the casks, cans, and jugs which correspondents have described as standing about in the early hours of the morning as empty evidences of the carousal from traffic in intoxicants in Kansas towns, I saw nothing of the sort, and I did see evidences of prosperous, happy homes and thrift, cleanness and order. So far as I could learn, the law is enforced. I was told by Col. J. J. Frey, who is superintendent of the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas division of the Missouri Pacific system, who has his headquarters at Parsons, that there is not a man in the town whose occupation is unknown. I was also told by Col. Frey, who is himself a total abstainer, that the enactment of the prohibition law had simplified his work at least one-half, and that he considered it an inestimable good. State Senator Kingberl, who had been strongly opposed to the law, assured me that since he had seen its results he was in it thoroughly. That he had feared financial disaster as a result of its adoption, but that nothing of the kind had occurred, but rather a renewed and constantly increasing prosperity.

We next visited Winfield, and here again both from observation and conversation I could but conclude that prohibition, from every point of view, was a pronounced success. This pretty little city with its street cars, its shady parks, its buildings of lovely green colored magnivia lime stone, and its thirty passenger trains arriving and departing each day, is a model of enterprise and prosperity. I was told by John E. Eaton, a prominent banker here, that there had not been a business failure in Winfield in ten years. State Senator W. P. Hackney, who is the present Mayor of Winfield, said to me in discussing prohibition that he had been opposed to the enactment of the law, and had voted against it, but when it became a law he believed in enforcing, and had found it the quickest way to make the jug-pie sick of it. Its excellent results had convinced him, as it had thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands of others, that it was a wise and beneficial measure. He stated that he believed in common with many others that whisky should be sold as medicine, but no saloons and no trading. And he also stated that in his opinion the community could sustain greater taxes than saloons. Senator Kingberl also said that the law was necessary, growing in popular favor, and no candidate who was known to hold views opposed to prohibition stand the least chance of being elected, and that if the law were voted up on to-day it would be carried by 25,000 instead of 7,500, which was the majority which made it a law.

Orchestra furnished the music.

Members all visited the Schools Friday, consequently there was none there.

Our streets were lined with farmer's teams with hogs, where all the porkers come from, Rector, Palmer & Co. were here Saturday. Mead, Wood & Gadd shipped a car load, and Wednesday two cars.

Angel & Kissinger shipped thirteen crates of poultry Monday, and will make another shipment this week.

Mr. Hard's mother returned home Wednesday afternoon, feeling confident that Geo. would recover.

Dwight Hause left Monday to accept a situation in Grinell Bros' Music store at 228 Woodward Ave. Det. Success attend him is the wish of his friends here.

Some of conductor Frank Stout and engineer Campbell's friends who were masons, on the Jackson branch, thought to give them a little surprise, consequently 21 from Manchester, 40 from Tecumseh and 15 from Clinton were present at Adrian Lodge, Wednesday evening, when the 3d. degree was conferred upon them. A royal good time was enjoyed by all.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

H. J. Williams of the firm of Coryell & Williams, has moved with his family to the village, having rented the house adjoining G. W. Clark's store.

Several of our citizens were at Adrian from Thursday morning until Saturday night as witnesses in the suit of William Birdsell vs. George C. Pocklington. A judgement of $67.00 was rendered by the jury in Birdsell's favor.

Louis Miller celebrated his 81st. birthday last week Thursday, by a gathering of 8 children, 9 grand children and two great grand-children.

P. S. VanDuser, who has been in Kansas for the past year, is home at present.

F. E Pocklington sold his little roadster to Darius Smith, who intends to make a speeder out of her.

Delos Palmer of Essex, Clinton Co., visited relatives here last week.

The time for the election of officers for the W. C. T. U. which was announced for this week has been postponed until a week from next Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the home of Mrs. Sarah Rappleye. A full attendance of the members especially is desired.

Thursday of last week a bee of over 30 met and tore down the old hotel.

Mrs. Hannable Rappleye, who has been visiting at Samuel Rappleye's for the past few weeks during his sickness, returned to her home in Philadelphia, Monday.

John Warner and Fred Preston of Tipton spent Monday night at the home of Daniel Linn, on their way to the lake, duck hunting.

Another old landmark has gone, it being the old hotel once known as the Ridgeway Exchange. It was built by Samuel Rappleye in the year 18 and in its pioneer day was looked upon as a fine little hotel, and we venture the assertion that a finer landlord never run a hotel, than the old owner of the Exchange. It was always a welcome place for the weary traveler to stop for the night after a long, tedious journey up the old turnpike from Dundee, as well as the more fortunate who spent an hour for dinner on their way from Adrian to Ypsilanti. But time has left his marks of decay until at last the place where once stood a fine little structure, now is marked by its ruins. Alike the once stately form of the kind landlord is bowed down by the hand of time, and sooner or later will only be removed with the past.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Kopkie & Kelly shipped a car of hogs from this station last Saturday. J. M. Green went to Buffalo on the train to see that they get through O. K.

Jno. Campbell has returned from the north. Jno. reports ten hunters to every deer.

The new church in this village has been enclosed and no doubts are entertained as to its being finished this fall.

Geo. Hoxie and Seymour Barrett sunnayed at Wampler's Lake.

Joe Campell returned last Saturday but started with two loads for his new home near Maple Rapids, Monday, afternoon.

H. E. Wilson had 34 bushels of buckwheat ground at Deerfield last week. We have sampled it and know it to be "the stuff for pancakes."

Mr. and Mrs. Morse of Little Hope, called on A. M. Sleeper and wife last Monday afternoon.

We notice in last week's issue an article under the very conspicuous head of "A Statement." Well, now, don't you feel yourself on our getting our information from some one else, as we were right there and saw the whole "circus." We don't print anything "second handed" but print what we know to be facts, "and don't you forget it." If the writer had not been an outsider he probably would have known more about it. Please don't think you can scare us by any such article, although you may deceive some innocent people. We did not answer that correspondent just to get up a quarrel, but when you come to dispute facts we will be with you every day in the week.

MACON MUSIC.

Archibald Chambers and family from Vassar, are visiting relatives and friends here.

Hamilton Niblack and wife from Clinton, spent Sunday here.

Mrs. Dr. Howell from Tecumseh, attended church here last Sunday afternoon.

Edwin Howell and wife went to Northville last Saturday, to attend the funeral of Mrs. Howell's aged aunt, Mrs. Lydia Chambers.

Rev. Mr. Bolt from Hillsdale, occupied the Baptist pulpit last Sunday morning in the absence of the pastor, Mr. Dennis.

A GOOD THING.

Mr. A. H. Ford, of Ionia, is in town this week exhibiting the "Parks Adjustible Steam and Smoke Ventilator." It is an attachment to a stove pipe. The object of the invention is to take up the offensive odors produced in the various processes of cooking as well as steam generated in boiling clothes, or escaping from boiling meats or vegetables, and by suitable conducts convey them directly to the chimney, to be discharged into the open atmosphere with the products of combustion. And in order to do this effectually and with little trouble and expense they should be brought within the draft force of the chimney, through which they may be carried to the open atmosphere. It is also desirable that the ventilating attachment should be made vertically adjustable, so that it may be elevated or lowered, as circumstances may require, and laterally adjustable to enable it to be used in various positions.

These are some of the reasons why the ventillator should be attached to every cook stove;

1st. It keeps the unpleasant odors while cooking, etc., from passing through every room in the house.

2d It saves the walls from getting black and dirty.

3d. It saves cleaning the windows so often and keeps them free from steam and ice in the winter season.

4th. It saves the health of our families and scalding of our wives, and makes homelike homes, healthful, pleasant and cheerful. And I call special attention to these ventilators in full assurance they are by far the best thing of the kind ever offered to the public, having been highly endorsed by every one that has seen them. They meet with ready sale wherever they have been introduced, and are their own constant advertisement.

Mr. Ford is now selling County rights and will make Tecumseh his headquarters until the 25th inst.

Dr. Jones' Red Clover Tonic is not a stimulant but a nerve food, restoring nerve force lost by sickness or excessive mental work or the use of liquor opium, morphine or tobacco. It supplies food for nerve tissues and by its gentle operative action, removes all restraint from the secretive organs, hence curing all diseases of stomach and liver. Dr. Geo Ferguson will supply the genuine Red Clover Tonic at 50 cents a bottle.

The graders on the C. J & M on the farm of E. L. Clark, in Ridgeway this week made quite a discovery. A copper kettle was plowed up, and the boys thought they had a pot of gold, but when the cover was taken off it was found to contain something resembling beans which emitted a strong stench. The pot of gold then vanished, and further search was made, and portions of human skull and other bones found. Also pieces of gray blanket with bright yellow stripes, and pieces of broadcloth. The graders had evidently disturbed the grave of some Indian braves and the kettle contained provisions for his long journey after death.—Hudson Post.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS

Lesson for November 20.

JUDGMENT AND MERCY.—MATT. xi, 20-30.

NOTES.—"Then began he to upbraid." This follows immediately after the previous lesson in time—the place is probably Capernaum. He reproached them for sadness because they refused to receive his loving kindness. "Chorazin."—So utterly has the curse been fulfilled that its site is uncertain. Dr. Thomson thinks that it is two miles north of Tell Hum at a spot called Khorazy by the Arabs.——"Bethsaida,"—Literally House of Fish situated at the confluence of Jordan with the Sea of Galilee. These cities represent the whole region round about them in their refusal of the Gospel, yet the synoptists do not mention any miracles wrought in them.——"Tyre and Sidon."—"Two Phœnician cities north of Palestine on the Mediterranean. They are still inhabited—the former having 3,000, the latter 5,000 inhabitants.——"Sackcloth and ashes."—Comp. Jonah iii, 5-9. The garment was made of goats' hair like a sack, coarse and uncomfortable. The ashes were put upon the head. Both symbols of deepest mourning and contrition.——"Capernaum."—The home of Jesus which he chose after he was turned out of Nazareth. (Luke iv, 16-31.) It turned on the highway between Damascus and the Mediterranean, on the north-western shore of the Sea of Galilee.——"Shalt thou be exalted unto Heaven?"—This peculiar exaltation is only what one might expect on account of her privileges. the greater the opportunity, the greater the rejection; and the greater the rejection the lower the fall.——"Hades."—The abode of the dead. "Sodom." It is now lost, and some dispute its very site.——"At that season Jesus answered."—Questions could not help arising among the hearers after this scathing denunciation. Christ quickly turns the picture from judgement to mercy. He has come to warn and also to save. Now is his opportunity.——"Babes."—Those that are ignorant of all worldliness, of worldly philosophies and specialties; the simple, the teachable——"Labor and are heavy laden."—These terms imply to work that man does against great odds. It is the overstraining, the fatiguing that result from attempting to do more than one can alone.——"Yoke."—Christ's yoke means man's subjugation. It is the submission to the authority of Christ, as oxen in the yoke are under the authority of their master.

INSTRUCTION.—The ministry of Christ was not everywhere successful. In Galilee where he preached most they seem to have repented least. This fact is an encouragement to many a minister. But no one has any right to indignantly berate the people and places where the Gospel seems to fall among thorns. That is the prerogative of sinless perfection. They rather look at the beam within. The fault may be in one's own heart. It is most apt to be there. Pluck out the offending member and start hopefully afresh.

The greater our opportunities for acquiring the truth the greater our usefulness should be, the purer our characters. If with all our opportunities we reject even one atom of the truth, what can we expect except the greater curse? Let no one blame Christ, therefore, if he fails. He can only blame himself.

The responsibility devolves also upon the teacher to work incessantly for souls, so that none at the bar of divine justice may say: "I sinned ignorantly. My teacher did not let me know the truth."

If Christ's justice is terrible his mercy is infinite, for we read that "many might have been saved if they had accepted."

Every evil tone in the body has its counterpart in the scar on the soul. Mercy is restorative justice. Thank God, no scars can be obliterated.

It is not learning or wisdom that [illegible] favor of God, but the humble heart. A sense of one's own worthlessness shuts the heart against new and strange truths. So it was that the peasant peasants received Christ, and the scribes scribes. Every great reform starts with the humbler classes, and this should make us fear lest how we reject light from unexpected quarters.

He is this redeeming love character of Christ that is revealed to babes. To know this and act upon it with faith is eternal life, even the meanest sinner.

Christ is the only mediator of judgment and mercy from God to man, as the ether is the only mediator of the light of the sun to earth.

Don't disgust everybody by hawking, blowing and spitting, but use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and be cured.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, NOV. 17

THE HONEY CROP.

The season opened warm and pleasant, and colonies having abundant stores boomed right along; but the dry weather, especially in the Northwest, "boomed right along" too. Here in Michigan there came a week of rain, but it was just after white clover had opened its blossoms, and no honey can be gathered from this grand honey plant during rainy weather. It finally cleared off and bees began to work in sections, when there came a week of weather so cool that scarcely a bee left the hives. The next week it warmed up and the bees again began to work on white clover, but before a section of honey was sealed over and ready to come off, bass wood blossomed a full week earlier than usual, and the clover was deserted for the basswood. Basswood yielded fairly about a week, and then the white honey harvest for 1887 was past and gone. One-forth of a crop here would be a fair average, while in the drought parched regions west of Lake Michigan there is almost no surplus. California, that often loads down our markets with car load after car load of honey, has none to send this year, and, even if she had, it is doubtful if it would be sent on account of the new freight rates.

Already prices are creeping up. First-class honey has already been sold in Chicago at seventeen cents wholesale. The dealers are awakening to the situation. The leading wholesale grocery house of New York City wrote me a short time ago, making inquiries in regard to the honey crop, and asking "What is the outlook." Taking the whole country over, there has not been more than a quarter crop, and there should be no haste to sell. There is but little demand for honey until cool weather sharpens the appetite for sweets, and November is amply soon enough to put honey on the market.

There are probably some localities where not enough honey has been gathered for winter stores; or, even if there has, it has been taken away in the hopes that more would be gathered. Some will become discouraged on account of the poor season and neglect the bees. It is quite likely that many bees will be allowed to starve the coming winter, their owners having become too discouraged or too disgusted with the business to prepare their bees for winter. Prices for honey will be high, and thos ewho have bees to sell next spring may be able to sell them at good figures.

A few farmers sometimes make the most money in poor seasons, and the bee-keepers who will attend strictly to business, and not lose their heads, may find the present poor season a blessing in disguise. Brother bee-keepers, be sure that the bees are prepared for winter this fall in the best possible manner. If they need feeding use a syrup of granulated sugar; it is equal to the best honey for winter stores and is cheaper this year.—[W. Z. Hutchinson in Rural New Yorker.

DEFIANT TO THE DEATH.

SPIES, PARSONS, ENGEL AND FISCHER PAY THE GREAT PENALTY.

Without a Tremor They Go to Their Doom and the Law's Supremacy Is Vindicated.

Parsons' Last Words Strangled in His Throat, While Engel Hurrahs for Anarchy to the Last—The Tragedy Graphically Described.

An Incident of the Last Night's Terrible Emotion of Fielden—The "Marseillaise" in a Jail Cell—No Clergyman Wanted—Bereaved Women Weeping Over Their Lost Ones—Mrs. Parsons Arrested and Released—The Guard at the Jail.

CHICAGO, Nov. 13.—August Spies, Adolph Fischer, George Engel and Albert R. Parsons, the four Anarchists who were tried a year ago and found guilty of the murder of Mathias A. Degan in the Haymarket square on May 4, 1886, were hanged Friday in Cook county jail and paid the penalty of their crime with their lives. The drop fell at 11:38 and the four men died with words of defiance and scorn upon their lips. Parsons' last word was actually strangled in his throat by the hangman's noose. Seldom if ever have four men died more gamely and defiantly than the four who were strangled Friday.

The condemned men got to sleep late

A TROUBLED SLEEP.

Thursday night, and awoke early on the morning which was to be their last on earth. Nor was their sleep as sound, as that of the traditional victims of the gallows on the last night; especially was this so in the case of Parsons. By 8 o'clock they were all awake and ready for breakfast, of which they partook with fairly good appetite.

Dr. Bolton, a Methodist clergyman, visited them all during the morning, but they had no use for him, although they received him courteously. Parsons told him to remember that he did not send for him when he bid him good-bye. About 10 o'clock Fischer stood up at his cell door, and in a fairly good voice sang a couplé of stanzas of the "Marsellaise."

The sheriff made his appearance shortly after, and read the death warrants to the men, which was receceived in silence. During the morning Spies busied himself writing a last letter, to whom it has not yet transpired, and it was while engaged upon this that Dr. Bolton called upon him. He raised his eyes, bowed to the clergyman, and immediately continued writing.

THE LAST MESSAGE.

Now the hour approached when the tragic end was to be accomplished. The sheriff and his deputies appeared again and proceeded to array the men in their shrouds and pinion their arms. This was done quickly, and the condemned were placed in Indian file and the march to death began.

Just before the march to the gallows Fischer lifted his face to the cells of Fielden and Schwab, in the gallery above, and shouted: "Bruder Schwab, wir wuenschen ihnen ein gluecklisches leben, und das sie bald meraus kommen." [Brother Schwab, we wish you a happy life and that you may soon be free]. Then he added, "Good-bye, Sam."

"Good-bye, Sam," echoed Spies and Engel. Parsons said nothing.

Schwab stood at the door of his cell, his hands folded behind, his brow overhung by matted hair pressed aginst the iron bars. Tears streamed down his cheeks and ran into his black and unkempt beard. He was so overcome by emotion that he could not speak. Not one of the spectators was unmoved.

"Don't put the braces on too tight; you hurt me." The words came in sharp, querulous tones from Parsons, who was the last one to be pinioned. He shook all over. Whether it was rage or fear that moved him, who knows?

Now the iron door between life and death opened and the men moved out, slowly and with measured tread. First came Spies, then Fischer, then Engel, then Parsons.

READY FOR THE FATAL WORD.

"Won't you come inside?" sneered the latter to a reporter, who had been observing the last toilet. With a crash which resounded through the entire building the heavy iron door closed, and presently the crowd of officers, with the four white shrouded figures in their midst, disappeared around the turn of the corridor.

"Oh, My God! My God!" exclaimed poor Sam Fielden as his comrades disappeared from his sight forever. Then he threw himself into a corner of his cell, dropping to his knees, and hiding his face in his hands. His powerful frame shook under the terrible strain of the moment with convulsive sobs. He was writhing in agony. For a few moments he remained in this attitude of passionate despair. Then the relief came. The great, strong man wept like a child. The spectators stepped reverently aside before this great paroxysm of grief.

At 10:55 fully 250 newspaper men, local politicians, and others, among them the twelve jurors to view the bodies after execution, had passed through the dark passage under the gallows and began seating themselves. The bailiff said a few words to the journalists, begging them to make no rush when the drop fell, but to wait decently and

The rattling of chairs, tables, and benches continued for several minutes, but by 11:6 there began to fall a hush, and conversation among the crowd sank almost to a whisper. The bare, whitewashed walls formed a painful contrast with the dark-brown gallows, ly near the floor. It was exactly 11:30 o'clock when Chief Bailiff Cahill entered the corridor and stood beneath the gallows. He requested in solemn tones that the gentlemen present remove their hats. Instantly every head was bared. Then the tramp, tramp of many footsteps was heard resounding from the central corridor, and the crowd in front of the gallows knew that the condemned men had begun the march of death. The slow, steady march sounded nearer and nearer. The Anarchists were within a few feet of the scaffold. There was a pause. The condemned men were about to mount the stairway leading to their last platform from which they would ever speak. Step by step, steadily they mounted the stairway, and again there was another slight pause. Every eye was bent upon the angle around which the wretched victims were expected to make their appearance. A moment later the curiosity was rewarded. With steady, unfaltering step a white-robed figure stepped out from behind the protecting metallic screen and stood upon the drop. It was August Spies. It was evident that his hands were firmly bound behind him underneath his snowy shroud.

He walked with a firm, almost stately tread across the platform and took his stand under the left-hand noose at the corner of the scaffold farthest from the side at which he had entered. Very pale was the expressive face, and a solemn, far-away light shone in his blue eyes. His tawny hair was brushed back in the usual crisp waves from the big white forehead. Nothing could be imagined more melancholy, and at the same time dignified, then the expression hat sat upon the face of August Spies at that moment. The chin was covered with a freshly building beard which partly concealed the expression of the firmly-cut mouth. The lines were a little hardly drawn around the corners, however, and bespoke great internal tension. He stood directly behind the still noose, which reached down almost to his breast, and, having first cast a momentary glance upward at the rope, let his eyes fall upon the 250 faces that were upturned toward him. Never a muscle did he move, however; no sign of flinching or fear could be discerned in the white face—white almost as the shroud which it surmounted.

Spies had scarcely taken his place when he was followed by Fischer. He, too, was clad in a long white shroud that was gathered in at the ankles. His tall figure towered several inches over that of Spies, and as he stationed himself behind his particular noose his face was very pale, but a faint smile rested upon his lips. As the man stood there waiting for his last moment his pale face was as calm as if he were asleep. Next came George Engel. There was a ruddy glow upon the rugged countenance of the old Anarchist, and when he ranged himself alongside Fischer he raised himself to his full height, while his burly form seemed to expand with the feelings that were within him. Last came Parsons. His face looked actually handsome, though it was very pale. When he stepped upon the gallows he turned partially sideways to the dangling noose and regarded it with a fixed stony gaze—one of mingled surprise and curiosity. Then he straightened himself under the fourth noose, and, as he did so, he turned his big gray eyes upon the crowd below with such a look of awful reproach and sadness as could not fail to strike the innermost chord of the hardest heart there. It was a look never to be forgotten. There was an expression almost of inspiration on the white calm face, and the great, stony eyes seemed to burn into men's hearts and ask: "What have I done?"

COUNTING THE PULSE.

There they stood upon the scaffold, four white-robed figures with set, stoical faces, to which it would seem no influence could bring a tremor of fear.

And now a bailiff approached, and, seizing Spies' robe, passed a leathern strap around his ankles. In a moment they were closely pinioned together. Engel's legs were next strapped together, and when the official approached Fischer the latter straightened up his full figure to its full height and placed his ankles close together to facilitate the operation. Spies was the last, but he was the first around whose neck the fatal cord was placed. One of the attendant bailiffs seized the noose in front of Spies and passed it deftly over the doomed man's head. It caught over his right ear, and Spies, with a shake of his head, cast it down around his neck, and then the bailiff tightened it till it rested snugly against the ear. When the officer approached Fischer Spies drew back his head and bared his long, muscular throat by the movement. Fischer's noose was very long, and the noose nestled snugly around it. When it was tightened around his windpipe Fischer turned around to Spies and laughingly whispered something in Spies' ear. But the latter either did not hear

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "gone-ness" or emptiness of stomach in the morning, coated tongue, bitter or bad taste in mouth, poor appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, bitter (thistle) pains here, there, and the feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, undescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity.

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, nor what other remedies have failed to do, this medicine will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an supporting, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery,

CURES ALL HUMORS,

Especially has it manifested its power in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, and Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. CONSUMPTION,

From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "CONSUMPTION CURE," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the

FOR HONOR'S SAKE.

By B. L. FARJEON,

Author of "Great Porter Square," "The Bright Star of Life," Etc.

"And you think that something of the sort may have happened in this case?"

"Had you been on the jury, what would have been your verdict?"

"Guilty."

"Had I been on the jury, what would have been my verdict? Despite my firm conviction that Layton is an innocent man, I should have brought him in guilty. It was not my opinion I had to be guided by, it was the evidence; and the evidence in Layton's case, as it was presented to the court and appears in the papers, indisputably proclaims him to be a guilty man. Again, when the verdict was pronounced I watched his face; again I saw there a startled look of wonder and astonishment; to his own mind the evidence against him was conclusive. Then it was that I observed him for the first time gaze upon the jury with some kind of interest and attention. Not once during the trial had he looked at them in any but a casual way, and I should not be surprised to learn that he was ignorant of their names. This is most unusual. Ordinarily a prisoner pays great attention to the jury upon whose verdict his fate hangs. He gazes upon them with deepest anxiety, he notes every change in their countenances, is despondent when he believes it to be against him, is hopeful when he believes it to be in his favor. Not so with Layton. When the jury were empanelled, and their names called over, he paid not the slightest attention to them; he did not turn his eyes toward them; he might have been both deaf and blind for all the interest he evinced."

"Perhaps you are not aware," said the doctor, "that he is very short sighted, and that without his glasses it would have been impossible for him to distinguish their features."

"I am quite aware of it," said the lawyer; "but he had his glasses hanging round his neck, and it is remarkable that not once during the trial did he put them to his eyes. I have here," said the lawyer tapping his pocketbook, "a list of the names, social standing, and businesses and professions of the jurymen engaged on this Layton mystery. As regards only one of them is my information incomplete. I know their ages, whether they are married or single, whether they have families, etc. I know something more—I know the name of the one man who would not subscribe to the verdict of guilty which the other eleven, almost without leaving the box, were ready to pronounce. Curiously enough, this dissentient is the person respecting whom I have not yet complete particulars. I am acquainted with his name, but have not been supplied with his address. I shall, however, obtain it easily, if I require it."

"What is his name?" asked Dr. Daincourt.

"James Rutland," replied the lawyer.

At this moment there was a knock at the door, and a man servant made his appearance.

"A telegraph lad, sir," said the servant, "has brought this message and is waiting to know whether it is correct and whether there is any answer. He says he has been in your rooms in the temple and was directed on here to your private address, the instructions being that the message was to be delivered immediately, either at your professional or private residence."

Mr. Bainbridge opened the telegram and read it. It was unusually lengthy, and from the expression of his face appeared to cause him great surprise.

"Let the lad wait in the hall," he said to his servant, "and you come up the moment I ring."

"Very well, sir," said the servant, and he left the room, closing the door softly behind him.

"I have been taking a leaf out of your book," said Dr. Daincourt. "You seem to learn so much from observing the faces of people that I have been rude enough to watch your face while you were perusing the telegram."

"What have you learned?" asked the lawyer.

"Nothing," replied Dr. Daincourt, smiling, "except that it appears almost as long as a letter, and that it has caused you surprise."

"It has caused me something more than that—it has absolutely startled me."

"You must forgive my rudeness. I spoke lightly, not seriously. If you have anything particular to attend to, don't mind me; I will go."

"No," said the lawyer, "I want you, and I think you will be as startled as I am myself. This is a cable message from Pittsburg, America, and, as you judged, it is more like a letter than a telegram. See, it covers three sides of paper; I will read it to you:

"'From Archibald Laing, Box 1236, P. O., Pittsburg, U. S., to Mr. Bainbridge, 99, C., London.

"'Reports of the result of Edward Layton's trial for the murder of his wife have been cabled here and published in the papers. There will, of course, be a new trial. If at or before that new trial you establish Layton's innocence, I hold myself accountable to you for a fee of $25,000. If you will employ yourself to that end, I have cabled to Messrs. Morgan & Co., bankers, Threadneedle street, to pay you on your demand the sum of $10,000, $5,000 of which are your retaining fee, the other $5,000 being an instalment towards all preliminary expenses you may incur. The sum of $10,000 mentioned above, and of course your own professional bill of costs will be paid in addition. Messrs. Morgan & Co. are empowered to advance you any further sums that may be necessary for your investigations. Set every engine afoot to obtain the acquittal of Edward Layton, spare no expense. If $1,000,000 is necessary, it is at your command. Send to me by every mail full and detailed accounts of your movements and proceedings, omit nothing, and make your own charge for this and for everything else you perform in the task I ask you as a favor to undertake. tion on his behalf. It is a matter entirely and confidentially between you and me. I write to you by the out going mail. Perhaps you may obtain some useful infor furnish you with the gentleman's name but Edward Layton and he were old friends.'"

Dr Daincourt drew a deep breath.

"Startling indeed," he said. "Archibald Laing must be the man mense fortune by speculating at the right moment in the silver mines. If so, he is good for millions. Do you know anything of him?"

"Not personally," replied the lawyer. "Only from report and hearsay. He is an Englishman, and must be an amazingly shrewd fellow, and that he is in earnest is partly proved by this cable, in which no words are spared to make his meaning clear."

While he was speaking to his friend, the lawyer was busily engaged writing upon a blank telegraph form, which was inclosed in the envelope delivered by the messenger.

"What will you do in the matter?" asked Dr. Daincourt.

"Here is my reply," said the lawyer, and he read it aloud:

"'From Mr. Bainbridge, 99, C., Harley street, London, to Archibald Laing, Box 1236, P. O., Pittsburg, U. S.

"'Your cable received. I undertake the commission, and will use every effort to establish Layton's innocence, in which I firmly believe. There is a mystery in the matter, and I will do my best to get at the heart of it. I will write to you as you desire.'"

He touched the bell and the servant appeared.

"Give this to the telegraph boy," he said, "and pay his cab fare to the telegraph office, in order that there shall be no delay."

When the servant had departed, the lawyer rose from his chair and paced the room slowly in deep thought, and it was during the intervals in his reflections that the conversation between him and Dr. Daincourt was carried on.

"'Is it not very strange,' said the lawyer, 'that I am advised in this cable message to seek information from the jurryman who pronounced Layton innocent, and whose address I have not obtained?'"

"Yes, it is indeed," replied Dr. Daincourt, "very strange."

"Of course I shall find him; there will not be the least difficulty in that respect. Tell me, doctor, it was proved at the trial that Mrs. Layton's death was caused by an overdose of morphia taken in the form of effervescing lozenges. It was established that she was occasionally in the habit of taking one of these lozenges at night to procure sleep, and her maid swore that her mistress never took more than one, being aware of the danger of an overdose. The usual mode of administering these noxious opiates is by placing one in the mouth and allowing it to dissolve; but they will dissolve in water, and the medical evidence proved that at least one or ten of the lozenges dissolved in water have been administered in the way, not one dose, to the unfortunate lady. The glass from which the liquid was drunk was found, not by her bedside, but on the mantel shelf, which is at some distance from the bed. It is a natural inference of the unfortunate woman that administered the dose to herself, that the glass would have been found on the table by her bedside. It was not so found, and the maid declares that her mistress was too weak to get out of bed and return to it unaided. These facts, if they be taken circumstantially, prove that the cause of death lay outside the actions of the invalid herself. The maid states that when she left her mistress the bottle containing about a dozen lozenges was on the table by her mistress' bedside, and also a glass and a decanter of water; and that when she visited her mistress between 6 and 7 o'clock in the morning there were no lozenges left in the bottle, and the glass from which they were supposed to be taken, dissolved in water, was on the mantel shelf. Now, in my view, this circumstance is in favor of the prisoner."

"I cannot see that," observed Dr. Daincourt.

"Yet it is very simple," said the lawyer. "Let us suppose, in illustration, that I am this lady's husband. For reasons into which it is not necessary here to enter I resolve to make away with my wife by administering to her an overdose of these poisonous narcotics, and naturally I resolve that her death shall be accomplished in such a manner as to avert to some reasonable extent suspicion from myself. I go into her bedroom at midnight. Our relations, as has been proved, are not of the most amiable kind. We are not in love with each other—quite the reverse—and have been living from the first day of our marriage an unhappy life. Indeed, my unhappy life in relation to the lady commenced when I was engaged to her. Well, I go into her room at midnight, resolved to bring about her death. She complains that she cannot sleep, and she asks me to give her a morphia lozenge from the bottle. I suggest that it may more readily produce sleep if instead of allowing it to dissolve slowly in her mouth, she will drink it off at once dissolved in water. She consents. I take from the table the bottle, the decanter of water and the glass. I empty secretly into the glass twenty-eight or thirty of the lozenges which the bottle contains. I pour the water from the decanter into the glass, and I beg my wife to drink it off immediately. She does so, and sinks into slumber overpowered by a sleep from which she will never awake. Perhaps she struggles against the effects of the terrible dose I have administered to her; but her struggles are vain, and she is powerless to resist the sleeping draught, and she sinks into a sleep from which no human agency can rouse her. The maid enters the room, finds her mistress dead, and, in the exaggerated fancy of a strong, ignorant woman, she imagines that her mistress has been poisoned by her husband. The maid states that when she left her mistress the bottle containing the lozenges was on the table by her bedside. The maid is the only living witness against herself. What then, I repeat, is my course of action? Before I killed her I removed the bottle, the glass and the decanter from the table by the bedside. I wish it to be supposed that she took them in a fit of delirium, and caused her own death. This theory would be utterly destroyed if I allowed the glass from which the poison was taken to be found at some distance from the unfortunate lady's bedside. Very carefully, therefore, I place not only that, but the decanter which contained the water, and the bottle which contained the lozenges within reach of her living hand. Upon that presumption would be suicidal, and, from motive, clearly traceable in my conduct and in such circumstances, I do not see, now, why the circumstance of the glass being found on the mantel shelf is a proof of my innocence."

"Yes," replied Dr Daincourt, "I recognize the strength of your theory—unless, indeed, you had in your mind the idea that it would be better to throw suspicion upon a third person; say, for the sake of argument, upon the maid."

"That view," said the lawyer, "de-suspicion from myself, a I naturally do to avert

I asked them whether, in the meantime, I was desiring to draw, say £100, was at liberty to do so. They said I was for even a larger amount if I required it. I did not explain to them the reason of my asking the question, but I will explain to you. It has happened, in these cases, that information has had to be procured, and that a little more or less money has had to be held out to some person or persons to unlock their secrets. I have no reason to suppose that anything of the sort will be necessary in this case. But I wish to feel myself perfectly free in the matter. I am satisfied with your lawyers' replies, and I shall spare neither money nor exertion in the endeavor to unravel the mystery which surrounds the death of Mrs. Edward Layton.

"It is scarcely possible you can be aware of it, but it is nevertheless a fact that, apart from my professional position in this matter, I take a deep interest which is personal, and that my sympathies are in unison with your own. Yes, it is that I have had some knowledge of Mrs. Layton, and that I esteem her, and I am bound to say that if my firm belief in her innocence I should perhaps have felt bound to engage myself in his cause, and you will excuse my saying that your views upon the subject of Laing should have failed to impress me. It is much upon professional as upon a professional grounds. The time is too short to do anything you propose this week, but it will be a pleasant thing for me to have a sight clew to work upon. It is very slight, very frail, but it may lead to something important. Your desire for a full and complete recital of my movements shall be complied with, and I propose, for this purpose, to adopt the plan of sending you, from time to time, not in the form of letters, but in a narrative shape. The facts of my own information will keep me more strictly to the subject matter, and will be the means of avoiding the needless repetition of the recital thereof, as I hope, what I have to say will go forth under numbered headings, not in my own writing, but in that of a short hand reporter, whom I shall specially employ. I could not myself undertake such a detailed and circumstantial account as I understand is your desire to obtain. In this way, it will save time which may be of great value in the elucidation of this mystery.

"I am, dear sir, faithfully yours,

"HORACE BAINBRIDGE."

I.

What struck me particularly in your cable message was that portion of it in which you made reference to a Mr. James Rutland. It happens, singularly enough, that this Mr. James Rutland was on the jury, and that he was the one juryman who held out in Mr. Layton's favor, and through whose unconquerable determination not to bring him in guilty has arisen the necessity for a new trial. Eleven of the jury were for a conviction, one only for an acquittal—this one, Mr. Rutland.

The first thing to ascertain was his address, which you could not give me. However, we have engines at our hand whereby such small matters are easily arrived at, and on the evening of the day after the arrival of your cable message I was put in possession of the fact that Mr. Rutland lives in Wimpole street. I drove there immediately and sent up my card.

"I have called upon you, Mr. Rutland," I said, with respect to Mr. Edward Layton's case, in the hope that you may be able to give me some information by which he may be benefited."

Mr. Rutland is a gentleman of about 60 years of age. He has a benevolent face and I judged him, and I think judged him correctly, to be a man of a kindly nature. Looking upon him, there was no indication in his appearance of a dogged disposition, and I lost sight for a moment of the invincible tenacity with which he maintained to his opinion when he was engaged upon the trial with his fellow jurymen. Contrary to my conclusion, he replied to me, in a firm voice, that he had no doubt in his mind.

"'Is it a long story?' he said, in response to my request that he would tell me the story.

"'It is a long story,' he said, 'and it is a painful one. I was the only man among the jury who failed to understand the facts of the case.'

"'It is a pity,' I said, 'especially if it is true, as I believe, that you may be able to throw some light upon it. I have come to you for assistance.'

"'I can give you no information,' was his reply. 'I found as you say.'

"'May I speak to you in confidence?' I asked.

"'Yes,' he said, 'although I have nothing to tell. Perhaps, on a statement of position I should refuse to enter into conversation upon this lamentable affair, and indeed it will be useless for us to go over ground upon it. As I have already said, I have nothing to tell you.'

"This was a way of having nothing to say, nothing to tell was to be suspicious, and I took from the words in which the determination was conveyed as from the tone in which they were spoken, that he dreaded, anxious and uneasy, a place indication that Mr. James Rutland could say something if he chose.

"Speaking in confidence," I said, taking no outward notice of his evident reluctance to assist me, "I think I am right in my conjecture that you believe in Mr. Layton's innocence."

"We live in an age of publicity," I observed, without irritation, "it is difficult to keep even one's private affairs to one's self. What used to be hidden from public gaze and knowledge is now exposed and doubtless aware that it is known that there were eleven of the jury who pronounced Mr. Layton guilty, and only one who was convinced him innocent."

Home Evidence

No other preparation has won success at home equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. In Lowell, Mass., where it is made, it is now, as it has been for years, the leading medicine for purifying the blood and toning and strengthening the system. This "good name at home" is "a tower of strength abroad."

People of Lowell

It would require a volume to print all Lowell people have said in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Mr. Albert Estes, living at 28 East Dane Street, Lowell, for 15 years employed as boss carpenter by J. W. Bennett, president of the Erie Telephone Company, had a large running sore come on his leg, which troubled him a year when he began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. The sore soon grew less in size, and in a short time disappeared.

Jos. Doughty, 31 Gorham Street, Lowell, had swellings and lumps on his face and neck, which Hood's Sarsaparilla completely cured.

Mrs. C. W. Marrett, widow of the First Assistant Fire Engineer of Lowell, says that for 16 years she was troubled with stomach disorder and sick headache, which nothing relieved. The attacks came on every fortnight, when she was obliged to take to her bed, and was unable to endure any noise. She took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after a time the attacks ceased entirely.

RIDGEWAY'S BIG DAY.

FORMAL DEDICATION OF THE JONATHAN HALL MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Two Interesting Programs Presented, and a Free Banquet to all Visiting Guests. A Description of the Edifice.

A more beautiful November day than yesterday is seldom seen in this latitude. The weather clerk was in his most gracious mood and everything seemed to conspire to render the dedication exercises a complete success. Ridgeway was decked in her holiday attire and every one was made doubly welcome to the feast of reason and the flow of soul. Scores of people from all points of the compass and by two o'clock, the village was more than crowded. People came from all the adjoining towns and many from a distance to participate in the exercises and rejoice with the residents of Ridgeway over the munificent gift of Mr. Bush.

We present below as fully as our space will permit a detailed report of the literary exercises, and a brief description of the building itself.

At 2:30 P. M. the spacious auditorium of the M. E. church was filled to overflowing and the audience was called to order by Rev. W. H. Benton, who had charge of both programs and who filled the role of presiding officer in the most happy manner.

The program opened with an organ voluntary by Miss Belle Barlow, assisted by Miss Mabel Hayden on the violin.

Scripture reading by Rev. W. H. Benton followed.

Anthem by the choir entitled "O, sing ye Jehovah's Praises."

Prayer by Rev. L. M. Belden.

Another anthem followed entitled, "The Lord is mindful of His Own."

The chairman then introduced Mr. R. T. Bush, who delivered a brief presentation address. His remarks were extempore, but they came directly from his generous overflowing heart and they touched the hearts of all present. No abstract can do them justice. The sympathetic voice, the easy gesture, the heartfelt earnestness so displayed cannot be reproduced in cold type, but we present a brief abstract of his remarks which will give our readers a faint idea of his address.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. President and Ladies and Gentlemen.—First of all I think we ought to express our gratitude for this magnificent day. If a day was ever made for an occasion this day was made for this occasion. My remarks will be exceedingly brief, for the reason that a little less than a year ago I addressed a letter to the inhabitants of Ridgeway and surrounding country in which I fully set forth my reasons for presenting this library building. My letter contained only two conditions. 1st, that an association should be organized so it could hold property. 2d. That a membership sufficiently large, be secured to properly maintain the institution. Both of these conditions were complied with and I feel like thanking you all for the prompt and cordial manner in which you come forward and pledged yourselves to become members. I have seen buildings in the old world, which have stood 4 or 5 hundred years and still in good condition which were no more thoroughly constructed than this building to day. Therefore I see no reason why this structure should not stand for many centuries, unless destroyed by fire or one of your Western zephyrs. Long may it stand as a loving and lasting memorial to the memory of the very excellent man in whose honor it has been erected. Sixty one years ago, Jonathan Hall, with his brother Reubin, moved into this section when it was almost a howling wilderness. These two men were educated and brought with them from old New England, a thirst for knowledge which is born only of education. I venture to say that no two men in Lenawee county did more with the limited means at their command to educate their families and elevate the tone of society by which they were surrounded. In every acorn, however small, there lies wrapped up the possibilities of a great oak. So when a small institution like this is started no one can foretell the possible outgrowth.

For example the great Cooper institute in New York City, grew out of a small institution like this, created some forty years ago, in the sixth ward of that city.

Only a few days since a band of destructionists, headed by two distinguished physicians, stole upon and skilfully disjointed your only skeleton, that which to my certain knowledge has been the pride of this community for the last twenty five years. Only day before yesterday, I caught in the very act, a company of the destroyers demolishing some of the church sheds which have been towed down to the earth in a supplicant attitude for mouths begging for support.

The necessity of combining work with faith was forcibly illustrated by a colored preacher, who in addressing his congregation said he had observed at times he prayed for food to suddenly appear after he had prayed long and earnestly enough, some how of this same experience. You have prayed long and earnestly that this day might come, and I have prayed that I might live to see this day, and I never would have seen it if I had folded my hands right down deep into your pockets and built the schoolhouse yourselves, then the Lord sent some one to build you a library.

In conclusion, with your permission, I will present to the President of the Hall Library Association the keys of the Library building, and at the same time to the association make a free gift of the lot, building and contents of the same, so long as it may be used for literary purposes.

Hon. G. P. Waring, the President of the Library association responded as follows:

MY DEAR SIR AND FRIEND:

It is truly with pleasure not unalloyed that I receive for the Hall Library Association of Ridgeway, the keys to that substantial and tasty structure, to day opened for dedication.

By this act of yours, this association becomes possessed of one of the best gifts that could possibly be given to this community. Words often fail in the expression of gratitude, but to day the choicest are but feeble indeed, in giving utterance to the thankfulness and appreciation which fills our thoughts and hearts.

It is nearly a year since, that you gave us. We were at that time overjoyed and delighted with the thought that our village, which has recently given new evidences of life, was to contain a free reading room and circulating library. Some thought it could not be; others were slow to believe it would ever materialize; but by this consummating act of yours, we have possession of a building which would be an ornament, and an institution which would be gladly received by any town containing many times the population of our own.

You are to be congratulated, sir, upon the conception of so grand and noble a purpose. Every individual in this entire community cannot do otherwise than congratulate themselves upon the good fortune of having bestowed upon them this elegant structure containing one thousand volumes of the best literature of this and past centuries.

It is truly meet [illegible] to be thankful in this da[illegible] when avarice and self gra[illegible] are so marked, that there is [illegible] interested in us having be[illegible]spered and successful in accumulation, who devised without solicitation, so laudable a method by which to share his prosperity with this entire community. Surely we are highly favored. As president of the association into whose care and keeping you now intrust the successful maintenance of so valuable an institution I have thought much and seriously of its responsibility. I have known something of the anxiety in your own mind, as well as that easily noticed in the family more especially interested, consequently in behalf of the association, I am called to day to represent, I say with true and emphatic earnestness that your gift is and will be appreciated, and that the certificates of membership issued before the close of the evening session will warrant that substantial support which only true and appreciative hearts can give.

Your offering is also accepted as a monument which is to perpetuate the memory of one of the earliest and most respected pioneers in this locality. It is a pleasure to do this of one whose entire family has manifested such a continuous interest in its construction and completion, desiring that the same might be free, inviting and commodious for all, thereby not only proving their devotion to the memory of the one called to his reward, but demonstrating at the same time their desire to perpetuate a true and lasting benefit upon this and following generations.

Finally let me assure you that by this act of yours, you have gained an enviable place in the hearts of our people who have come to know you better and who will always gladly welcome you to our midst. So long as men, women and children shall delight in the companionship of books; so long as yonder building stands exerting the conscious and unconscious influence for good that it must; so long will your name and the nobleness of this gift be cherished by our people.

Yes, after generations pass away, and the elements of time have wrought that model of beauty into ruins, those who fill our places here will be enjoying a higher intellectual and moral life because of this act of yours to day. May the kind hand of Providence ever be with you and yours, granting to you prosperity, health and happiness in this life followed by a welcome into that other and higher life where such deeds as we are now witnessing will receive their full reward.

At the conclusion of Mr. Waring's address, an episode occurred, not down on the regular program. Little Hettie Russell, aged eleven years, stepped up to the platform and presented to Mr. Bush a beautiful basket of flowers, in behalf of the Sunday School, reciting these lines:

As the pupils of the Sunday School
We wish to express our Heartfelt thanks to you for the gift,
You have given us today.

We have met in former years,
Your face we know and love dear,
And we hope you may be spared to see fruit
In the coming years yet by.

There are but some few flowers
That could be found in winter,
Within our grounds and during fear
Our warmest thanks you shall

Mr. Bush made an effort to respond, but tears filled his eyes and choked his utterance. He could hardly be expected to speak when he could not see. There was not a dry eye in all that congregation, and the few words he said were as eloquent as the most brilliant oration.

A violin solo followed by Miss Mabel Hayden, with organ accompaniment, by Belle Barlow.

Rev. Peter Sharp then gave a few historical reminiscences, in substance as follows:

Went into the possession of 37 years ago that night is and the surrounding country. The wild turkey, the otter, the bear, the boar, the wolf and the Indian travelled at will and held possession of them. They have long since vanished and the towering forests that shadowed them with boundless profusion of shade, have been felled by the axeman's resounding blows. The wilderness and the solitary places became glad and rejoiced and blossomed as the garden of the Lord.

But few other pioneers began sooner, or contributed more than Jonathan Hall, to subdue a howling wilderness. He was a native of [illegible] was born in 1800 and in his 27th year 1828 visited the Peninsula Territory. He admired her undulating plains and her beautiful woodlands; her rapid streams, sparkling rivers and crystal lakes, and finally after reaching home (walking most of the way) and [illegible] ing home in the spring (all the way on foot) he came back in 1829 and located a tract of land traversed by a branch of the far famed river Raisin. Here on that pleasant little streamlet he erected his last home and lived a child of nature, in simple blessedness for six years. Then he heard and heeded the advice of God: "It is not good that the man should be alone." The trees which had served defiance to time, continued to stand farther and farther away from his habitation. The fields were cleared and their produce increased, and so did the demands of a rising family. Melinda, Velina and Ann, twins, educated, in fairly away from home, straining the money getters to their utmost tension. M[illegible] but died in port and left his father to plod his weary way without a son. Jonathan Hall was not like the man who said, Lord bless me and my wife, my son John and his wife, us four and no more; but his generosity extended to all, especially to the needy and oppressed. He did not believe it was right because a man had a skin not colored like his to doom him, and devote him a slave, to till his ground, to carry him, to fan him when he slept and tremble when he awoke. No, dear as is freedom, and in his just estimation prized above all price, he would rather be himself the slave and wear the bonds, than fasten them on him. He was patriotic and brave. When Blackhawk was expected to invade the western border of Michigan, he was a volunteer and received for his services a patent for 160 acres of the public lands. He had the confidence of his fellow citizens, whose votes placed him in official positions.

Mr. A. F. Clark, of Saline, followed with a fine solo, entitled "Not ashamed of Christ."

Rev. W. J. Clack, of Blissfield, favored his old friends with a stirring address. His remarks were brief and entirely extempore and hence we are unable to reproduce them.

Rev. James Wright then gave a short address, of which we present a synopsis.

Jonathan Hall Memorial Library is not alone for this day's happy thought and reflection standing before you people here assembled, but in its beauty and significance, in all of its bearings through successive years with their generations, under the providence of God it will be a means instituted by its founder, Mr. R. T. Bush of Brooklyn, N. Y., under which in time to come your children's children, in their life's work, will become better fitted to sweeten and grace their positions in society.

As an American people we are living in an age of the world, when it does seem as though there should be some what of wise guidance in selecting the books to be read and re-read in our home. As a rule it is only the one of book that one can or cares to spend time to read the second time, hence the importance of a properly selected library, so as to have food suitable in order to strengthen and enrich; making the mind of both old and young more and more productive, that each receive a portion "in due season."

Alas for the bad book! Wild, visionary and poisonous literature should be driven out for as one reads so he is, and thinks, and builds character.

Truly these days of ours may well be measured by the words of King Solomon, "My son, be admonished: of making many books there is no end." He who puts a bad book into the hand of the boy does even a worse deed than to set on fire his neighbor's barn. Said Dr. Talmage of Brooklyn: "Show me the man who has gone down to ruin and I will see one who can go back to the first steps of his fall by reading the bad book." Therefore, while your sons and daughters will have something to read, then be faithful as parents and guardians to put into the hands of your little ones good and wholesome literature, that you yourselves may not cause, by neglect of duty, one of these little ones to be offended, as Jesus said: "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." Indeed, in this Library Association that is to have an existence from this day forward, in her executive wisdom provision shall be found so as to give just the readable literature to her membership that will create intelligence and morality in individual and home life. The individual and home [illegible] so that they may avail themselves alike of the advantages to read the books belonging to Jonathan Hall Memorial Library should not fail to receive a membership in the association. All persons do not have a [illegible] education, nor is it possible for persons generally to have the means to spare to buy such books as they would have access to in this library that is dedicated to day. But most could if not all, pay $1 each year and make good their annual "hit or miss" in the association.

"Day Dreams" was the rich [illegible] beautiful solo rendered by Mr. Clark.

The closing address was given by Rev. W. H. Babbitt, of which we give the salient portions.

The literary benefits of a well selected public library is to them assigned me for a few remarks.

I have placed the term [illegible] in my theme, because there are books and books. An enormous library of volumes might be gathered which would be better to burn than read. There are the sensational novels of the boys and the [illegible] of a [illegible] kind. We have in some [illegible] large libraries composed principally of works of this description, and [illegible] are the curses of a [illegible] communities in which they are [illegible]. But [illegible] library [illegible] one is a benefit to those with a [illegible] respect in many ways. It is so [illegible] ically in a literary way that [illegible] way of promoting a literary [illegible] disposition to read good books [illegible] to profit from their careful and [illegible] tive perusal as we [illegible] a pure [illegible].

The Americans are more of a busy people than a literary people. They read the news upon a [illegible] a little in [illegible] and magazines, but books are not [illegible] require thought in their production. It is only the lighter kind which are generally attempted and these are skimmed over in haste. The complaint is made that there [illegible] to read them. In many cases this [illegible] people live almost perforce a hurried life. Yet there are occasions there to which seasons of leisure occur that would afford opportunity for the reading of many a good book, provided the book were at hand and there were a taste for reading it. In a place like this after the summer hurry is over, the long kind evening comes, in which very much might be done by the young people and the older ones for the self improvement through a well chosen course of reading, now that the noble gift of this library has come to you. Here, on these shelves are 1,000 volumes. What a mine of information, of instruction and of pleasure is contained in these [illegible] ready to work. How delightful to be [illegible] here, with some of the best thoughts of the best minds of all ages, including our own. Lord Bacon says: Libraries are as the storehouses where all the relics of the ancient saints, full of true virtue and that without delusion or imposture, are preserved and reposed." Again he says: "If the invention of the ship was thought so noble, which carrieth riches and commodities from place to place, and consociateth the most remote regions in participation of their fruits, how much more are letters to be magnified, which as ships, pass through the vast seas of time and make ages so distant participate of the wisdom, illuminations and inventions the one of the other." Here is the stately Argosy which Will Shakespeare has filled with the wealth of his great intellect and his wonderful imagination. This precious cargo, lover of good reading, is consigned to you. Here are histories, modern histories of ancient times, and there has in these modern days been a wonderful improvement in the writing of history. Here are books of travel which will take you round the world, as you sit by the fireside and hear the storm raging without. Here are books on natural history and on science, which are as interesting as any fairy tale. Here are the poets giving their pure and lofty thoughts in charming language. How rounded the pleasure to be derived from the pages of Dryden, of Cowper, of Burns and of our own Bryant and Longfellow and Whittier. Here are the romances of the great Wizard of the north and here are the wit and humor of Hood, of Lamb and of Holmes.

You have seen perhaps, a picture of an old man in a library, standing on the steps by the well filled shelves. He has a pile of books lying on the steps. He has one volume beneath each arm and one between his knees and one he has open in his hands and is devouring its contents with intense eagerness. This is the book worm. I do not desire the book worm. But I do ask me the young man or the young woman who has the taste and the culture to appreciate those great authors on whose well known works the entire world has set the seal of approval, who can talk intelligently about such authors, and who loves to be in the society of intelligent and well read people. Such young men are not apt, when they get up and say, "I never read any books." There is something wrong in the popular taste of the day. The social surroundings are to be cultivated to add that social attractiveness of the lighter order which, by no law of art can be the power of the mind, but just delight the senses and entirely play the muscles of the body, should have a fascination, or the young is to be expected. There is a great now of animal spirits in the youthful organization. But there is need of something beside the mere scrap knowledge which can be gathered from the newspaper, to prepare young men and young women to take their places in the better circles of society. They need settled tastes of an intelligent and intellectual kind. In these days of temptation arising from too great a love for fun and for excitement a taste for reading may prove to be quite a safeguard. Of the two young men, one of whom loves always to be going, cannot bear to be quiet, lives mainly on excitement, while the other loves to take his book and sit down to read and who loves to talk of what he reads we somehow feel persuaded that the latter is more likely to pass in comparative safety the ordeal of life's sore temptation than the former.

A well selected library, of a goodly size in a country place like this, housed in a good house and made easily available to everyone, has a tendency to study, literature in the minds of the intelligent and to awaken [illegible] of the [illegible] with his hands a desire to quit some new [illegible] to us world. This [illegible] building with its inscription [illegible] message, good books [illegible] would benefit him to read. [illegible] the will [illegible] read [illegible] Hedges. He reads. He studies. He becomes master by and by of a correct literary taste. He learns how to express thoughts when he sees them, his own thoughts, in a [illegible] way. He becomes a [illegible] mean [illegible] to Ridgeway [illegible] Many a [illegible] smaller [illegible] Receiving his first [illegible] knowledge from help [illegible] books, some one [illegible] college [illegible] honor [illegible] scientific [illegible] graduate [illegible] village that gave him [illegible] We have reason to be thankful for every institution in which [illegible] matter and of soul [illegible] to wed [illegible] every impression or extra [illegible] the

A PLEASANT EVENT.

On Thursday evening of last week, at the residence of Dr. E. Hause, on Shawnee st., one of those pleasant social events occurred for which Tecumseh is becoming somewhat noted. Soon after the setting of the sun, about fifty guests assembled, and at seven o'clock the word was spoken by Rev. T. G. Potter which joined together in wedlock Arthur R. Pardington and D. Gertrude Hause. The array of wedding gifts was too elaborate to specify in detail, but they comprised a beautiful secretary from the bride's lady friends, members of her graduating class, and other presents of silver in the form of a tea set, cake basket, spoons, knives, etc. After the usual congratulations had been passed around the guests were treated to a bountiful repast, and the remainder of the evening was spent in social pleasure. The groom is a son of Rev. Mr. Pardington, a former pastor of the Tecumseh M. E. church, and the bride has long been a favorite in Tecumseh social circles. The happy couple left on the night train for Jackson, thence to Brooklyn, N. Y., where they will reside. The best wishes and heartiest congratulations of many friends go with them.

The November MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY is one of the brightest and most richly illustrated issues of the year. Oliver Cromwell's portrait is its frontispiece, incident to the romantic story of the first settlement of Shelter Island, in 1652, told by Mrs. Lamb in her happiest vein, entitled "The Historic Home of the Sylvesters." Shelter Island was erected into a manor in 1666, and cultivated by negro slaves until it became a gem of beauty. During the Quaker persecutions in Massachusetts it was where the sufferers fled for shelter, and its history is interwoven with the wrangles between the Dutch of New York and the English of Connecticut while the two parent nations were at war in Europe. The paper is informing on a multitude of hitherto obscure points of early history, and is delightfully diversified with incidents. The shorter articles are varied and entertaining. The number concludes with its carefully edited departments of original documents, Minor topics, Notes, Queries, Replies, Societies, etc., well filled, its "Historic and Social Jottings" illustrated, and a dozen or more ably written book reviews. Price, $5.00 a year. Published at 743 Broadway, New York City.

Attention! Farmers. There is no use having your horses standing in the streets these cold wintry days when Tom Hanley will furnish you with stable room and good hay at the Lilley Hotel barn, Tecumseh. If he is not around the stable he can be found at the hotel office.

The J. & M. gravel pit is the scene of great activity at present. A steam shovel is in operation and loads 100 cars of gravel a day and keeps three engines busy hauling it away. They go to Britton and then take the Wabash to Alverdton, where it is put on the new division of the road in process of construction. There are five side tracks in the pit at presnt.

The necktie and apron social given by the young ladies of the Methodist church last Friday evening was a decided success the net proceeds being $10.00. An enjoyable evening was passed by all present, the musical part of the program being conducted by Irv. Osborn in his most happy manner. As to the "bemuning" part of the program, the aprons showed some unique specimens of needle work and it was hard to judge which was the most neat and tasty. It was finally decided that Earnest Coller was entitled to the prize, a miniature wood saw and horse, and the young man will have a chance to exercise his muscle on his father's wood pile the coming winter.

Have you signed for any gas stock yet? If not, why not?

Ten Nights in a Bar-room was presented by Leech & Stevens' company last evening to a small house. The company is a strong one and has several good male singers who materially help the program. The characters of Joe Morgan and daughter Mary were exceptionally good, as was also Sample Switchel.

As an engine on the gravel train of the C. J. & M. road was at the water tank taking water this morning, the train which was standing back by the depot started down the grade, striking the engine and knocking it off the track. Considerable delay was had in getting it back on the track and the noon train was an hour late in consequence. But little damage was done and no one was injured.

The Rev. W. H. VanDoren, a clergyman from New Jersey, has been visiting the Reformed churches of this vicinity during the past few weeks. His ministrations and services have been well appreciated here and a call has been extended to him, which he has however declined in order to accept the pastorate of one of the strongest churches of the denomination in the state of Illinois.

Signed, GEO. V. OSGOOD,
JOHN BOYD.

A movement was quietly started here several days ago to organize a company to bore for oil or gas. A subscription paper has been circulated by Capt. Fred Wood and Ben Garlinghouse, and nearly $3,000 have already been subscribed. As soon as the required sum of $5,000 shall be taken a company will be organized at once, and an effort made to see whether Tecumseh lies over Trenton rock or not. This matter should not be allowed to languish for a single day. Tecumseh is just as likely to strike oil or gas as any of the towns in Ohio, and the experiment can be tried with very little expense, if all our citizens come forward promptly with their share of aid.

Among the December magazines, "Peterson" stands out prominently in its freshness and interest. It is really astonishing how bright and youthful this old favorite keeps; the only thing that reminds one of its age is the remembrance that it has been a welcome monthly guest since one's childhood; a periodical essentially for the family, possessing elements of interest for all, from the oldest to the youngest. This has been a year of exceptional interest and excellence; its engravings and illustrations have never been better, and, regarded from a literary point of view, we may assert that it has never before reached the same standard. It has given stories and serials from some of the most popular writers in America, and its prospectus for the forthcoming year is even richer in promise. Nearly a half-century, of useful and successful progress has taught us to place entire confidence in this friend of countless households, and we look forward to the effects of 1888 proving a complete triumph, both as a literary and illustrated magazine. The price is only Two Dollars per year, with large reductions when taken in clubs, and elegant premiums to those getting up clubs. Sample copies, free to those desiring to get up clubs. Address PETERSON'S MAGAZINE, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A. H. Ford, of Ionia, is in town this week selling his patent right. He is working up a fine business.

Oscar Heck returned from Kalamazoo college this week, on account of his health. He will remain until December to recuperate.

Mr. J. W. Slaight, of Lodi, N. Y., has been visiting friends in Macon for the past three weeks, and will return home next Saturday.

Dr. Hause is getting up a Florida party. They will start about the 20th of this month, and will number at least fifteen or possibly twenty, persons.

The Michigan Bee Keeper's Association will meet at East Saginaw, Dec. 5, 6, 7, and 9. An excellent program has been prepared and a large meeting is looked for.

At the last meeting of the Farmer's Social Club the propriety of getting up a [illegible] was discussed. This is a good idea, and the HERALD will do its full share in that direction.

Thomas Smith has moved from Ridgeway into Wm. Smith's house west of the village, and William and his children will board in Thomas's family hereafter. This will be a good arrangement for all parties concerned.

The band benefit on Thanksgiving night, Nov. 24th, is expected to be the social event of the season. There will be a good crowd of dancers to dance and a good crowd of spectators to spectate. Everybody go.

Owing to the inclemency of the weather last week Wednesday evening, the N. L. Farmer's Club meeting was adjourned to meet at same place, J. F. N. Bowen's, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 23d, with the same program.

A posthumous essay entitled "In Dickens Land," will appear in the Christmas Scribner's by Edwin Percy Whipple, the late critic and lecturer, who was one of the most ardent admirers of the genius of Charles Dickens.

A movement to submit the question of local option to a vote has been started in the western part of this county, and a sufficient number of signatures will probably be obtained soon. The petition has not been circulated as yet in this section of the county.

As a walkist, Miss Bessie Church claims to have the call on Miss Lillie Brown. She teaches in the Updike district and has walked from the village to her school several times on Monday morning, a distance of 4½ miles.

Here is an item of interest to the ladies. If white clothing, say a white dress, is put away in a drawer or closet it will become yellow, but if placed in a box lined with blue paper, or wrapped in a blue cloth, it will come out as white as it ever was, no matter how long it lies.

The Agricultural College students are home for their winter's vacation. About 75 of them have engaged winter schools. Among them Lyster H. Dewey, of Cambridge. He will wield the birch in District No. 4, of Woodstock, where his mother taught school just 43 years ago.

Remember the dance on Thanksgiving eve, Nov. 23d. Good music will be provided by the Tecumseh orchestra and the boys are getting ready for a fine time. The party will be under the auspices of Co. C, which is a sufficient guarantee that it will be properly managed.

"Ah" said an Adrian bummer the other morning as he coughed the raw spots out of his throat. "I'm always in the greatest suspense after I get up until I take a drop." "Not much like a condemned anarchist," said an adjacent wretch, "or your greatest suspense would come after the drop. Do you follow me?" They did, but he was a good runner and escaped unhurt.—Evening News.

Adam Dutcher, of this place, is said to be 110 years old, and was waited on 1st Tuesday by Uncle Benjamin Bowerman (aged 82), formerly of Hanover. The old pair could almost converse about matters which occurred before the flood, and which come under their personal observation. Both have been hard working men and did much to convert Southern Michigan forests into productive fields.—Addison Courier.

The Evening News was visited by fire last Thursday which proved very disastrous, completely wrecking their press rooms and causing a loss of something like $10,000.00. By great efforts, even chartering a special train to bring paper from the mills 60 miles distant, the News was not only ready to issue their papers at the usual hour the next day, but even issued an extra at 7 A. M., but 9 hours after the fire. They handled every advertiser in his proper position and space, and issued one of the largest papers ever printed as their evening edition, containing a full account of the fire and giving a practical demonstration of modern journalism and the facilities the News has for handling advertisers and reaching their subscribers even under the greatest difficulties. It was a feat of which the News has good reason to be proud.

RIDGEWAY'S BIG DAY.

world. The din of a great commercial city rolls up in New York, around a plain but solid building, rolling back upon itself however, before it reaches its threshold. That building is Astor Library. Enter the door of that Library behind you. The millionaire, and the day laborer, the mechanic and the professor, all tread softly and speak low in those sacred precincts. One seems surrounded by invisible spirits of departed authors. Here the material does homage to the immaterial. Here business bows to learning, rudeness bows to culture, and mammon bows to mind. The presence of buildings like this in our busy, cities filled with choicest volumes and made free to the reverent visitor, is a sign, like our churches of an advanced stage of civilization. Their presence in our towns and villages has a like significance. May these signs multiply and give increasing evidence of the presence of culture, and religion in our homes.

After a session of nearly three hours, the afternoons program closed by singing the Doxology, in which the entire congregation joined. A recess was then taken for refreshments.

THE SUPPER.

The large dining room in the basement of the church was filled with tables which were loaded with all the viands which farmer's wives are adepts at preparing, and a free invitation was given to all to join in the feast. It is needless to say that we accepted the invitation. Our friend, Tom Hunter, who officiated as reporter for the Times, did likewise. We were somewhat surprised however, to see Mr. Hunter, although a married man, sandwiched between two young ladies at the head of the table of honor. But as the leading musicians and the Herald scribe were accorded places at the same table we wisely refrained from any interference. The tables would accommodate 140 persons at one sitting and they were nearly filled the third time. At least 400 persons must have been fed, and several baskets of fragments were gathered up at the close of the feast. Ridgeway hospitality was put to the test but she responded nobly. The intermission before the evening program was spent in visiting the Library Building and inspecting its contents.

THE EVENING EXERCISES.

The program in the evening began promptly at seven o'clock and lasted two hours. It was a fine combination of musical and literary effort and was listened to by an audience that filled every available nook and corner of the auditorium. The program merited a detailed report but we are compelled to content ourselves with a brief outline.

The first selection was an anthem by the choir "Glory be to God."

Prayer by Rev. W. J. Clack.

Quartette and Chorus—"O how lovely is Zion."

Dr Loree read an entertaining letter from Lyman R. Dean of Detroit, regretting his inability to be present and speaking a few earnest words in commendation of Mr. Bush and Jonathan Hall.

Recitation by Hattie Russell, beautifully given.

Six small boys sang a character song with fine effect.

Recitation by Miss Rose Easlick. This was one of the gems of the evening.

Solo by Mr. Clark; a fine song, well rendered.

Ironicies by Mrs. W. R. Wilson. It was full of comic hits and was intensely relished by the audience.

Mr. Bush then took the platform and read "The Brakeman at Church," which was heartily enjoyed.

Another solo by Mr. Clark.

F. J. Temple then delivered an original poem which was carefully written and possessed much merit, and was enthusiastically received.

Rev. Benton then gave a short address, fitly rounding out the exercises of the day.

A violin solo by Miss Mabel Hayden was given with more than her usual vivacity and brilliancy, and the congregation was then dismissed with the benediction.

THE BUILDING itself.

The elegant edifice which was the primary cause of yesterday's festivities is the gift of R. T. Bush, Esq., of Brooklyn, N. Y., to the village of Ridgeway. It is located on the East side of South street directly opposite the M. E. Church. It is a brick structure in the shape of a Greek cross, forty feet spare, with ten feet taken out of each corner. The foundation is of limestone, the water table being three feet above the level of the ground. The style of architecture is Gothic and the building covered with Vermont blue slate. The basement is 20 by 30 feet in size, which contains the furnace and hot air conductors and fuel room. The main entrance is from the West by double doors, set beneath an arch. Over these doors is a semi circular window of tinted glass. A blue granite tablet is set in the brick wall over the main entrance with these words inscribed thereon "Jonathan Hall Library 1887." It has a heavy projecting cornice with handsome scroll work in the gables. The building is lighted by bi-fenestral 30 inch windows, all provided with inside blinds. Upon entering the building you step into a vestibule 8 by 10 feet in size, the floor of which is covered with matting. A beautiful hanging lamp is suspended from the center of the ceiling. Two small rooms open from the vestibule on each side, one of which is used for a store room, the other for a gentleman's wardrobe. [illegible] the reading room 20 by 25 feet in size. The floor is covered with a beautiful matting and the walls and ceiling are covered with gilt paper of changeable shades. This paper was furnished by [illegible] of Tecumseh. It is something new and very elegant in appearance. At the South end of the room are the cases containing the books of the Library. In front of them, is a walnut railing and the librarian's desk. In the center of the room stands two reading tables which contain an assortment of magazines and illustrated papers. These tables will accommodate eight persons each. Over each table are suspended two hanging lamps. The side walls are fitted with file books for daily and weekly papers. Over the book cases hangs an oil portrait of Jonathan Hall, full bust size. North of this room with folding doors between is the Ladies Parlor 15 by 20 feet in size. The walls and ceiling are decorated with the [illegible] paper from Wright's establishment and the floor is covered with a Brussels carpet. It is finely furnished with rocker chairs and a tête-a-tête, upholstered in Turkish plush, with an elegant center table over which hangs a [illegible] glass lamp. Opening from this room on the East is the ladies wardrobe and opening from the reading room on the east is the store room and entrance to the basement. The ceilings of all the rooms are fourteen feet from the floor. The interior woodwork is of pine, butternut and walnut, finished in hard oil. The entire building is an elegant piece of workmanship, both the exterior and and interior presenting a very attractive appearance.

A Handy Pocket Atlas.

An attempt to put in pocket size the contents of a large reference Atlas is usually accompanied by rough, inaccurate, and inelegant engraving and printing, but in the New Pocket Atlas of the World, published by Ivison, Blakeman & Co., 753 & 755 Broadway, New York, this is not a fact. Ninety-one Maps containing nearly every geographical point of interest throughout the world, are given, and each is a gem of the engraver's art. Delicately yet distinctly colored, these maps are exquisite illustrations of the best color printing to day obtainable. While the maps leave nothing to be desired by way of clearness, they are fully up to date, and show every recent discovery, or change of boundary.

One hundred and twelve pages of terse, well arranged, and accurate information concerning every important country or state on the globe, follow the maps in this compact volume. In fact, the book is not only a comprehensive Atlas, but also a condensed Gazetteer of the whole world, and all put in an attractive and substantial binding, and [illegible] fifty cents. On the receipt of this sum the publishers will mail it to any address.

And now people were expecting that the speeches for which the four doomed ones craved twenty minutes each would be delivered. Instead every one's surprise the officer who adjusted the nooses proceeded to fit on the white cap without delay. It was first placed on Spies' head, completely hiding his handsome face. Just before the cap was pulled over Fischer's head Deputy Speare turned his eyes up to meet those of the tall young Anarchist. Fischer smiled down on his guard just as pleasantly as Engel had on his, and he seemed to be whispering some words of forgiveness, but if they have been either he or not even the fastest echo reached the men in the corridor below. Engel and Parsons wore donned their white caps after this, and now the four men stood upon the [illegible] to be in perfect

As was ready now for the signal to let the drop fall. In the little box at the back of the stage and fastened to the wall the invisible executioner stood with ax poised, ready to cut the cord that held them between earth and heaven. The men had not noticed this, but they saw the end was near.

For an instant there was a dead silence, and then a mournful, solemn voice sounded from behind the first right-hand mask, and for the moment a wail of sorrow and warning. Spies was speaking from behind his [illegible] words seemed to drop into the [illegible] like pellets of fire. Here is what he said: "It is not meet that I should speak here, where my silence is more terrible than my utterances."

Then a deeper, stronger voice came out with a muffled, mysterious cadence from behind the single mask that hid the face of Parsons. He spoke eight words: "This is the happiest moment of my life."

Then another voice that catches up the refrain in a different tone. It is firm, harsh, and excited. Engel was cheering for anarchy, "Hurrah for anarchy! Hurrah!" [illegible] the last words and the last cheer of [illegible]

There was a sudden pause. Parsons never spoke a word more. A sharp, creaking noise, [illegible] creaking sound, and Spies, Parsons, Fischer and Engel were no more.

When the [illegible] of all became imperceptible, which was about [illegible] o'clock, the [illegible] bodies swung back and forth while the deputies stood [illegible] a contrast stifling [illegible] the bodies, and [illegible] get away wanted to be [illegible] The sheriff opened a door [illegible] and a great mass [illegible] poured out.

PROTECTING THE JAIL.

A State of Seige Maintained at The Place of Execution.

CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—The strong guard of armed men that was thrown around the jail Thursday night was trebled Friday morning by a much stronger one. All passage ways, the streets bordering the jail were cleared and rope were stretched across to mark the lines they had traversed, and [illegible] passed [illegible] approach.

Capt. [illegible] commanded the men who were stationed on Clark street and guarded the doorways adjacent to the jail. A rope was thrown across Michigan street at Clark and here special men armed with repeating rifles and revolvers guarded the entrance. The men who paroled along Clark street did not carry rifles. They [illegible] garments concealing pistols and bayonets, with belts carried in plain view. The houses and sidewalks up the neighborhood were guarded by police and on the roofs to the left of the jail, in sight from the jail, a company of police were on duty.

From Clark street on Illinois and around the corner of the jail to the alley on Dearborn Capt. Sowack, with over 100 men and Lieuts. Kipp and Larsen, protected all passages to the jail from the north side. These men were armed with the regulation Springfield rifle. On Illinois street passage was strictly forbidden. One hundred and sixty men were carefully stationed along the front of the jail. On the roofs, in the windows, on the tops of the houses, in the cellars—everywhere was a strong guard ready to challenge the least intruder who did not wear the uniform.

Thirty-five of the guards were armed with rot guns, each of which would mow down a [illegible] marked that he had no fear of a rush at this time, but was apprehensive for Sunday.

Arrests During the Day.

CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—Mrs. Parsons and her children and Mrs. Holmes made an attempt to pass the jail guards about [illegible] on Friday morning, and were stopped, when they made considerable disturbance and were put in a patrol wagon and taken to the station, where they were kept until late in the afternoon when they were released.

Just after the execution had taken place an Anarchist began giving utterance to some hurrid remarks at the corner of Clark and Kinzie street and upon being ordered to move on resisted somewhat and the policeman lightly struck him on the hip. The blow gave a dull, metallic sound and [illegible] in an instant. He was seized, his revolver taken from him and the patrol wagon sent for in which he was conveyed to the station. His name was Lang, a railway man from Logansport, Ind.

Later in the afternoon two men were heard talking on a Milwaukee avenue car platform. One was overheard to say that "we will fix the —— to-night," and officers were called, who "ran them in in quick time."

LINGG'S FRIGHTFUL TAKING OFF.

The Young Anarchist Blows His Whole Face Off with Fulminate of Mercury.

CHICAGO, Nov. 11.—A flash, a dull report, a spurting of blood, followed by a horrible gurgle, and Louis Lingg, the bomb-maker, dropped to the floor of his cell a mangled piece of humanity. He had blown off his face with a fulminating cap inserted in his mouth and fired by a fuse attached to it with a lighted candle, evidently in the hope that the explosion would blow his his head to pieces and cause instant death.

LOUIS LINGG.

The awful deed of self-destruction occurred at 8:25 Thursday morning, when all within the jail was quiet, and but few persons were present. Mr. Osborne, the death-watch, first responded to the report, and instantly there was a rush for Lingg's cell.

The sorely wounded Anarchist lay upon the floor of the cell, with the blood pouring in torrents from the front of his head, which was torn away, and the once handsome young man was unrecognizable—he had no face at all.

When picked up he was lying on his face and he was turned over on his back. As this was done an ejaculation of horror burst forth at the horrible sight that met the gaze. Lingg's entire lower jaw had been blown away, the cheeks were torn out and hung down in jagged pieces upon his neck, the teeth were knocked out, the gums torn away, and but a small stump of the tongue appeared protruding from the mangled throat. In the upper part of the throat, immediately under the lower part of the jaw-bone, a terrible gap had been torn out from the inside. The ball of the thumb of the left hand, with which he had touched off the explosive in his mouth, was torn open.

At one time the physicians thought he might possibly recover, but after noon he began to sink, and at 2:15 p. m. he breathed his last, conscious to the end. While he was being supported in a reclining position some time before his death he took a pencil from a reporter and wrote on a strip of paper: "I can not breathe lying down. I would rather sit up," and these were his last and only words.

His tongue was afterward found in the cell, torn almost to pieces and blackened by contact with the heat of the explosion.

THE GOVERNOR'S PREROGATIVE.

Complete Text of Ogleshy's Decision in the Anarchists' Case.

The following is the complete text of the governor's decision in the Anarchists' case:

THE STATE OF ILLINOIS, EXECUTIVE OFFICE, SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Nov. 10, 1887. On the 20th day of Aug., 1886, in the Cook county criminal court, August Spies, Albert R. Parsons, Samuel Fielden, Michael Schwab, Adolph Fischer, George Engel, and Louis Lingg, were found guilty by the verdict of the jury and afterward sentenced to be hanged for the murder of Matthew J. Degan. An appeal was taken from such finding and sentence to the supreme court of the state. That court, upon a final hearing and after mature deliberation, unanimously affirmed the judgment of the court below. The cases now comes before me by petition of the defendants for consideration as governor of the state, of the letters of Albert Parsons, Adolph Fischer, George Engel and Louis Lingg, demanding unconditional release, or as they express it, "liberty or death," and protesting in the strongest language against mercy or commutation of sentence proposed against them [illegible] unless based upon the [illegible] on my part of their entire innocence, the crime of which they stand convicted.

[illegible] considered the evidence in the record, the [illegible] petitions, as well as all other [illegible] for and against executive clemency, [illegible] upon my conscience and judgment [illegible] the [illegible] of Aug. 20, 1887, [illegible] Lingg, Engel and Fischer [illegible] Spies, Parsons and Schwab [illegible] to imprisonment for life. [illegible] Fielden [illegible] to imprisonment for life. [illegible] sentence [illegible] Spies.

While [illegible] have come to a different conclusion [illegible] in fact to the sentence of the defendants Adolph Fischer, George Engel, Albert R. Parsons, and Louis Lingg, I regret to say that in for the second sense of the obligations of my official oath have been unable to do so.

RICHARD J. OGLESBY, Governor.

GIRLS AND MOTHERS READ THIS

I wish to tell you of the case of a girl in your city, who had been afflicted with suppression two years. Her father had paid over $500 for doctors bills, still she was failing. She had the worst countenance that I have ever seen, a kind of greenish yellow; he was emaciated, had constant bowel trouble, and had to take morphine every night in order to sleep at all. All who saw her thought she would die. Her parents said they had done all they could. I repeatedly urged them to try Zoa-Phora, but they were strongly prejudiced against "nostrums." Finally the mother said, "We must do something, and this is as likely to help her as anything." She and I persuaded the father to let the girl try it. As a result in four months her functions were established and regular, and in six months she was the picture of health—a living wonder to all who had known her.

I could describe 20 other cases, not as wonderful as this, but still very remarkable cures.

CHICAGO, Nov. 15.—Five high priests of anarchy were laid to rest Sunday afternoon. Laid to rest, not as English malefactors would have been, with a hole in a prison corridor for a grave, and a load of quicklime for a bed. Laid to rest, in a beautiful garden of fragrant flowers, amid the music of bands, solemn chants and passionate oratory, and the tears of thousands. Scarce less honors could have been paid the hero or patriot than were showered by their sympathizers upon the caskets that contained the mortal remains of Spies, Parsons, Engel, Fischer and Lingg. Sober thoughtful men who saw the great outpouring of people, who were confronted with the red emblems of the commune at every turn, who listened to the strains of the Marseillaise, asked of each other as to what it signified. Was it the last expiring gasp of the social revolution, or was it notice to Chicago and the United States, that "The King is dead long live the King?"

BORNE TO THE HEARSE.

It was precisely noon when the band in front of the Spies residence on Bryson street struck up a funeral dirge. This was the signal for the starting of the head of the funeral procession. At the same moment the door opened the pall-bearers appeared. Twelve men holding large floral designs high in the air lined the space from the steps to the hearse, and beneath this arch of flowers the coffin was borne. Not only the street from one end to the other, but the vast expanse of prairie on the other side, was packed with people, and when the casket with the covering of black cloth and heavy silver trimmings came into view, heads were bared and all were dressed in deep mourning, with long crape veils covering their heads and reaching to their feet. The rear of the procession was made up of delegations from numerous trades societies.

AUGUST SPIES' LAST JOURNEY.

A low moan, broken only by the sobbing of women, went through the throng. Gently the casket was lifted into the hearse and covered with some of the floral offerings, while the others were placed on the top of the vehicle or fastened to the four stationary plumes at its corners. Then, the band still giving forth its dirge, the procession moved.

Behind the hearse were carriages containing the relatives of the dead man, the first being occupied by Mrs. Spies, his mother, Capt. Black and Nina Van Zandt. The latter was in the same costume that she had worn during her visits to the jail, and the trimmings of her jaunty hat, like Joseph's coat, were of many colors. There was a stolid look upon her face, but otherwise she manifested no sign of grief. Behind came the members of the Aurora Turn Verein and a delegation from the Bakers' union. All wore badges of blue and gold fringe.

At Fischer's house there was a short halt, and the second detachment, headed by the hearse that contained the remains, fell into line. The German band struck up the "Marseillaise," many of the spectators joining in the chorus, and the now double funeral moved southward to Aurora Turner hall. Here the other sections of the procession with the remains of Parsons, Engel and Lingg were in waiting.

There had been a pitiable scene at the late house of the former at the last moment. The widow was in a frenzy of grief. She threw herself upon the casket, and her moans and cries could be heard in the street below. "Oh, I can not live! I must die! I must die! My God what shall I do?" she shrieked. "Pa, speak to me, speak to me only once again!" The silver plate on Parsons' coffin bore the inscription "Albert R. Parsons, aged 39. Murdered by the state of Illinois, Nov. 11, 1887."

The funeral procession was now complete; and to the mournful music and drum taps of seven bands it slowly moved down town. No flags were carried and the only one seen during the entire day, except a small United States flag whose appearance is noted below was the American standard which floated at half mast from Turner Hall. The procession as viewed from the Lake street bridge comprised some 20,000 people. At the head was the Defense committee on foot followed by members of the Aurora Turnverein, International Turnverein, West Twelfth street Social Turnverein, Vorwaerts Turnverein and Turners from Pullman and Kensington. Then came the hearse with the remains of August Spies. Behind were the carriages containing friends and relatives and fifteen hundred members of the various organizations affiliated with the Central Labor Union and a delegation from Typographical Union No. 9.

Next followed the Fischer hearse escorted by delegations from two lodges of the German Typographical union, the Socialist mannerchor, and three other Socialistic societies of which the dead man was a member. There was then a slight gap and then with slow and solemn tread came a delegation from the famous bond assembly, 1307 K. of L., as special escort to the body of Parsons. In the rear of the hearse immediately after the carriages containing his wife and children and friends marched several hundred members of the assembly and another contingent of Central Labor organizations, the Painters union furnishing the largest representation. The Engel division included a large delegation from the Carpenters' union, all wearing red emblems. Around the hearse a scarlet banner was festooned, and on its top there rested a wreath of bright red roses. The hearse with the suicide Lingg was the last in line, and in the first carriage that followed it sat his sweetheart, Zda Friedel.

AT THE RAILWAY STATION.

But the most remarkable feature of the procession was yet to come. It was a delegation of 400 members of the "Fortschritt," a German organization of women. One and other friends, were put in prison garb, shaved, and put on the books as convicts No. 4,526 and 4,527—Fielden and Schwab. Upon arriving at Joliet they had a terrible ordeal to pass through. Their friends were ushered into a room where the prisoners were lined up for the inspection of the curious. Fielden and Schwab were lionized together and put aboard an Alton train and sent to Joliet to begin their long imprisonment. The men were very disinclined to talk, but evidently enjoyed breathing the air of Illinois outside prison walls. They both, however, declared anew that Spies, Parsons and themselves had nothing at all to do with the bomb work at the Haymarket, and that on the books as convicts Nos. 4,526 and 4,527—Fielden and Schwab, respectively just after noon, Fielden and Schwab were lionized together and put aboard an Alton train and sent to Joliet to begin their long imprisonment. The men were very disinclined to talk, but evidently enjoyed breathing the air of Illinois outside prison walls. They both, however, declared anew that Spies, Parsons and themselves had nothing at all to do with the bomb work at the Haymarket, but even after this number had made their trips there were thousands upon thousands who were compelled to relinquish their intention of taking part in the final ceremonies, and had to remain in the city.

Each casket was borne from the station upon the shoulders of eight men, and the procession was headed by four women in deep mourning, upon whose shoulders rested an immense floral crown, with a smaller one of crape in the interior. The coffins were placed upon a platform that had been erected immediately in front of the receiving vault, and the 15,000 spectators gathered around. The shadows of evening were falling, and as Capt. Black stepped forward and raised his hand bare were taken off and a deep silence fell upon the vast throng. The counsel for the men whose remains rested at his

A Horse Who Can Talk!

Everybody has heard a "horse laugh," but who has ever seen an equine gifted with the power of speech? Such an animal would be pronounced a miracle; but so would the telegraph and the telephone have been a hundred years ago. Why, even very recently a cure for consumption would have been looked upon as miraculous, but now people are beginning to realize that the disease is not incurable. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure it, if taken in time. This world-renowned remedy will not make new lungs, but it will restore diseased ones to a healthy state when all other means have failed. Thousands can gratefully testify to this. All druggists.

In matrimonial affairs love frequently goes out with the tied.

What are Suppositories?

A. G. Rose, from New London, Conn., writes: Send me two boxes of your Kemp's Pile Suppositories by mail. Our druggist is out. They are for a friend. I tried everything without help, but the Suppositories cured me.

The treatment is new and within reach of all, and would advise the affected to give them a trial. For sale in Tecumseh by Baker & Hall, at 50c per box.

Drunkeness or the Liquor Habit Positively Cured by Administering Dr Haines' Golden Specific.

It can be given in a cup of coffee or tea without the knowledge of the person taking it; is absolutely harmless and will effect a permanent and speedy cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker or an alcoholic wreck. Thousands of drunkards have been made temperate men who have taken Golden Specific in their coffee without their knowledge, and to-day believe they quit drinking on their own free will. IT NEVER FAILS. The system once impregnated with the Specific it becomes an utter impossibility for the liquor appetite to exist. THE FARMER

Pays for the clothing of America. We claim at the same time, he provides as our artist has shown, for the inner man. Such being the case, it is but natural that we should have a soft spot for "the honest son of toil." Besides, has he not also shown a partiality for Mabley & Company and have we not always tried to reciprocate this evidence of friendship by furnishing him with good, reliable wearing apparel at prices lower than he could obtain elsewhere? No house in the state of Michigan has such a clientage among the farmers, and no house strives to do more for its patrons than that of Mabley & Company.

In purchasing our goods for the fall and winter trade, we have bought with a special view of meeting the requirements of this important branch of our trade, and are therefore able to assure our friends the farmers, their wives, daughters and sons that never before were we so well prepared to satisfy their wants as this season. Being the largest house in Michigan we naturally get better figures in buying than any other dealers. This advantage we share with our patrons. SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

The first real blizzard of the season put in full time Saturday and Sunday.

The editor of the Tecumseh News was in the village on Monday and spent the evening at the library.

There is a very good interest manifested by some of the young people who spend their evenings at the library.

Samuel Fletcher, formerly of our village, but at present of Grand Ledge, came back one day last week and got his household goods and little boy, and returned to the Ledge where he is at work.

The school in Dist. No. 5 is under the supervision of Nettie Dibble for the winter term, and the school in Dist. No. 3 has secured the superintendency of A. E. Palmer for the winter term.

Rose Gregory of Albion, has been the guest of Rev. and Mrs. Benton for the past few days.

Mattie Rappleye of Dundee, visited her sister Lulu over Sunday.

The Ladies church social will be held at the home of Mrs. John Arner this week Friday evening. Hot coffee and doughnuts will be served and a cordial invitation is extended to everybody to attend.

Keep a sharp lookout for the singing school canvassers next week, as a committee is going to canvass to see if a singing school can be held here this winter.

Our village school seems to be running along smoothly and occasionally a new student drops in.

Joseph Billmeyer of Raisin, was in the village last week with a fine lot of fish.

Mrs. Jas. Potter and daughter, Adah, spent Friday and a part of Saturday with Jesse Potter and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Bush and Ella Hall left for Brooklyn, Monday. Miss Hall's health is not very good at present, but Mr. Bush has improved in health very encouragingly during his stay here. We regret very much to have them leave so soon after the library had been opened.

Persis Rymert of Macon, was the guest of Anna and May Smith, Wednesday of last week.

Mrs. Peter Swick of Milan, attended the dedication exercises last week.

Vernie Barrett, while in Tecumseh last week Thursday evening, hitched his horse while he was visiting with a young lady friend, was somewhat broken up when on going out to his buggy to find that his fine robe was nowhere to be seen. He called the attention of the Marshal to the fact, when a young lady came out of her hiding place and gave up the robe. It was only a joke from the other one, Vern. She is a little jealous, you see.

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

The cold snap has closed up fall plowing, which has been going on quite extensively. Fall work is quite generally closed up. "There are a few who never get through."

G. V. Osgood has been building a shed at the north end of his barn 30x32 feet, which adds materially to his winter quarters for stock. Geo. is now at Sanford, Midland county, rusticating with old neighbors who have been settling there during the past two or three years. He anticipates some fun with John Howe, hunting.

Gil. Bailey has the boss cow, a grade Holstein 6 years old, that has averaged 2 lbs of butter a day during the past six weeks without extra feed.

Mrs. M. Yates is quite indisposed.

A. Easlick has just completed 30 rods of barbed-wire fence with a 6 in. board between the top two wires, he intends keeping the board painted white. The cost of fence including labor, is as follows:

150 lbs. of wire, 4½c	$6 37
31 pine boards 1x6x16@15c	3 72
32 Oak posts 4x4x6@12c	3 07
31 " stakes, (center of lengths) 2x2x4½	56
2 days work, @$1 25	2 50
	$16 22

Tom Prest and David Gregg started for England and Ireland last Monday the 14th.

There was a farewell social at Joe Daykin's, Friday night. Joe is moving into the upper story of his new block at Britton.

Jennie and Phebe Gage Osgood, Ida and Schuyler Easlick, Geo. Miller and Rob. Bailey are attending school at Ridgeway this winter.

A leading social event, which should have been noticed two weeks since, occurred at the home of Meeker Scudder and wife on Thursday the 3d. inst, when relatives to the number of 35, headed by that old Vet. Uncle Horace Gray, rushed in upon the old people without warning. But they stood their ground and held the fort. It is unnecessary to add that a grand social time and sumptuous repast was the result of the meeting. Mr. and Mrs. Scudder were among the early settlers of Michigan.

W. D. Easlick has been nursing a lame shoulder the past 3 or 4 weeks, by rolling down the embankment at the Moorville bridge, from his horse, becoming frightened at a large bolder take the train at Milan for his work on the T. & A. A. R. R. where he has been laboring most of the summer.

Speaking of the Government owning its own telegraph, why not own its own coal mines, so that when people have provided themselves with coal stoves and made preparation to patronize the trade, with the expectation of procuring supplies from the inexhaustible mines, at a fair price compared with other products, based on the price of labor, cannot have their plans frustrated by a combination of capitalists, contracting the supply and inflating the price.

Then again, why not the State run its own saloons; the income would pay all taxation and leave a nice dividend besides.

Mrs. A. McCrorie is visiting friends in Allen county, Indiana.

George Gray and family started for their winter home in Florida, this week Tuesday.

Mrs. J. Bobean is quite indisposed.

Uncle John Davenport died Wednesday the 9th. Aged 87 years.

Now that the anarchists have been executed, and the right justice and public policy pertaining to the surroundings have been thoroughly discussed through private conversation and the public press; it would be well to devise a remedy against similar future events, because anarchists are not all dead and the cry of discontent is great throughout the land. We hope the present ordeal will have a wholesome effect in shaping public policy, and awakening individual responsibilities.

The only thing that Lenawee county can do, on the spur of the moment is to pass upon local option. All will admit that strong drink fires and nourishes the germ of discontent, and that the saloons throughout the country and their output are brooding iniquity and that continually.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Willis Chatfield is at present writing spending a few days in the house on account of an inflamed eye.

W. E. Doty and wife returned from a visit in the northern part of the State last Saturday morning.

Charlie, Annie and Flora Chase made Mrs. F. Kelly a call Monday evening.

Dexter Still has quit working on the section. The railroad officials concluded that the track was in so good shape they needed but four men on a section.

Kelley & Kopkie shipped a car of hogs from this station last Saturday. Lue Sleeper "followed suit" same day.

Flora Chase of Tecumseh, closed a very successful term of school in this district Wednesday, Nov. 23d.

A deer has been seen in this section by a number of persons, but as yet none of our noted Nimrods have been able to capture him. Wish they would and bring us some venison.

MACON MUSIC.

The reformed aid society held at Mrs. William Osgoods last Wednesday afternoon was well attended.

Richard Harkness and daughter, Mrs. Mary C. Wood of Raisin Valley, held services at the M. E. church Sunday evening.

NORTH EAST FRANKLIN.

It looks now as though we might enjoy a regular, old-fashioned, New England Thanksgiving—cold weather, and all.

Joe Rockwood is moving out of the neighborhood. He will spend the next year on David Woodward's fruit farm.

Mrs. Freel Davenport has been having typhoid fever, but is said to be recovering.

Mrs. Derwing and Edwin have been visiting relatives in Jackson Co.

Guerdon F. Taylor, from Auburn, N. Y., is visiting his brother, Rodman Taylor. The two drove out to Liberty a week ago Saturday, going from there to Hillsdale Tuesday, and returning to Franklin Friday. They report a pleasant trip and good visit.

Bertha Taylor has been at home, sick, the past week, but returns to her school Monday.

Fred Davenport and wife will soon take possession of Lant Updike's house, made vacant by the removal of Mr. Rockwood's family.

Mrs. L. Spencer of Raisin, visited at her father's last week.

Grace, daughter of Joseph Spaulding, is very ill with peritonitis. She has been sick but a few days, and was not considered seriously so until Friday. Sunday morning her physician, Dr. Tuttle, pronounced her condition very critical, and, in fact, gave the family no encouragement. Gracie is a general favorite in the neighborhood and many, besides the anxious relatives, wait with fear and dread while the bright young life trembles in the balance.

They are now putting the plate glass front in E. R. Smith's store.

Whether it is owing to this being Thanksgiving week that there is such a dearth of news, certain it is they are very scarce and as your correspondent has not a very fertile imagination he cannot manufacture them. The principal event the past week in this community was the Convocation of clergy at St. John's Episcopal church, Monday evening, and all day Tuesday. The services were all well attended by our citizens and proved to be very interesting. The following clergy were in attendance: Rev. Mr. Brooks of Monroe, Joseph St. John of Hudson, Bailey Jones of Hillsdale, J. Phelps of Tecumseh, Rev. Flowers of Brooklyn. Mr. MacLean of Ypsilanti and the Rector, G. E. Peters. The convocation commenced Monday evening at 7 o'clock. After evening prayer Rev. Flowers read a paper, subject, Church Work in Country Parishes. It was an able article. Then followed a discussion of this subject in which Rev. McLean and others participated, including Rev. Williams of the Congregational church. Tuesday morning at 9 A. M. a business meeting, followed by the Holy Communion and sermon by Rev. McLean. At 3 P. M. Mr. McLean opened the discussion of the topic, Ministerial Support, by an essay of great merit, followed by Rev's Brooks, Flowers, Bailey, Jones, Phelps and W. P. Wastell. At 7 P. M. after evening prayer, General Missionary topics were discussed, the following clergy taking part: Bailey Jones, Flowers, Brooks and Phelps. The next convocation will be held in Tecumseh some time in February.

Duluth's new Congregational church will have a stairway so citizens and strangers can climb up under the spire and see the city from a religious point of view.

FARMERS UNION.

The Union met at Albert Waring's Friday evening, Nov. 18th. The meeting was called to order by the President, and, after the reading of the minutes of the last meeting, the officers were elected for the ensuing year which resulted as follows:

Pres.—Minor Davidson.
Vice Pres.—W. C. Hopkins.
Sec. and Treas.—Emma Brown.

The Pres. then took the chair, and in the absence of some of the participants, the following program was presented:

Music—Choir.
Dec.—Joseph Eason.
Rec.—Lillie Vedder.
Rec.—Hattie Russel.
Inst. Solo—Lena VanNess.
Dialogue, Personating olders—Chas. Weeks and Aggie Eaton.

Question—What are the best methods of feeding and wintering stock? Opened by F. Davidson.

F. Davidson—I think it a good plan to keep stock always ready for market. Always feed all of my stock a little grain during winter. A little grain causes them to eat coarse feed better. Do not feed colts grain during winter. I feed one-third oats, and one-third corn, mixed with bran. Change feed for sheep. I used to sell straw but think a man impoverishes his farm by so doing. Different cattle need different feed.

Mr. Kehoe.—First, a person should like his occupation, if he does not, he does not do well. Have good attractive animals. Raising stock requires attention and care, and to make money out of it, we must keep our stock growing. Regular feeding is the most essential. They need different quantities of grain at different times. Feed moderately on the start. Change of feed is best for all animals. I think bran and oats is better for colts and by feeding them, they become more and more gentle and docile.

Mr. Dubois.—I think it a good plan to have good warm stables for stock. In cold weather my stock is all stabled at night. I feed hogs coarse middlings and bran. I am in favor of change of feed, especially if you are feeding corn. Corn, oats and shipped stuff mixed is a good feed for hogs.

H. B. Eaton.—The better the feed the better the stock. It pays to cut and steam feed for milch cows. But is expensive for other stock. It is a question whether it pays at present prices to feed mill feed. I favor change of feed.

Mr. Benedict.—If I were going to feed stock and wanted them to thrive I would not feed them bran. The better the grain the better the stock will be. I think a man fools away his money to pay $15.00 a ton for bran, you had better buy oats.

Mr. Hopkins.—I believe a certain quantity of bran is essential to the well being of any animal. The physical condition of the system demands it. Too much rich food is injurious. I have fed bran in connection with corn, to lambs with good results. Bran serves as a medicine, keeping animals in hearty condition.

Mr. Williams.—I think roots and corn in place of buying and feeding bran will pay better. Most of all shelter the stock comfortably. If stock is left out in the cold it must be fed enough more to make up for the loss caused by the cold and storm. I think many colts are spoiled by not feeding enough.

M. Davidson.—Keep stock growing till ready for market. I believe cattle should be fed all they will eat with plenty of exercise till ready for market. I think colts should be given a shelter with a field for exercise. I favor feeding bran as a medicine.

The meeting then adjourned to meet at John Cadmus' Friday evening Dec. 2d., when the following program will be presented:

Song—Choir.
Dec.—Jared VanVleet.
Reading—Rose Hendershot.
Vocal Duet—Sophia Vanness and Louisa Brown.
Rec.—Mary Dubois.
Paper.—W. C. Hopkins.
Song—Choir.
Question—Which is the most profitable for the farmer to raise, the coarse or fine wooled sheep. Opened by H. J. Williams.

TO FILL SPARKS' PLACE.

CANDIDATES WHO ARE "TALKED OF" BY THEIR FRIENDS.

The Present Acting Commissioner, Stockslager, Said to Have the Inside Track—His Chances of Either of Indiana and Ohio—Work of the Railway Mail Service Second the Work Accomplished.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 15.—Late Tuesday afternoon President Cleveland sent Commissioner Sparks's resignation to the president, accompanying it was a letter saying that as the duties of the interior had fallen upon one of their colleagues he felt it was time that he should be relieved. He also reported the decision in the Logan land case made by Secretary Lamar.

Washington Correspondence. The acceptance Wednesday of Gen. Sparks' resignation as commissioner of the general land office has caused the announcement from Rev. Dr. Newman to be probable succession. The ground resignation is construed to mean that an early appointment is to be expected, and that Lamar will make the recommendation after consultation with Mr. Vilas. The candidates for the place are very few persons have [illegible] Clark, of Kansas, who [illegible] upon the [illegible] far as [illegible] has been [illegible] Commissioner [illegible] Eastman, of Illinois, [illegible] Matson, Wade, Ward, Robert Pierce, and others, have had an active time in congress, and have [illegible] President Harrison. Senator Voorhees had a long talk with Stockslager Thursday, and gave him to understand that he should support the application of the delegation, and of himself especially. This would make Cobb's candidacy rather embarrassing. It is believed that Secretary Lamar would favor Stockslager's promotion, as it would place in the office a man with the details of the office at his fingers' ends, and would save considerable contest among aspirants for the place. Commissioner Black of the pension bureau, is being talked of somewhat for the place, but it is understood that the president proposes that Black shall stay where he is. Sparks has no plans for the future. Having ample means, it is said he will rest for a year, and will then be a candidate for congress from his old district in Illinois.

WILL PURSUE SPARKS' POLICY.

The President's Letter Accepting the Commissioner's Resignation.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 17.—The president's letter accepting the resignation of Gen. Sparks was made public Thursday, and is as follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Nov. 15, 1887.

HON. WILLIAM A. SPARKS, MY DEAR SIR: I have read your letter of yesterday with much regret, and in it the [illegible] of the company [illegible] the president. I should be not [illegible] the motives of the controversy which has arisen between the secretary and yourself further than to say that my impression in [illegible] was [illegible] if I had any [illegible] of any [illegible] the secretary, I [illegible] a [illegible] interpretation which I [illegible] honestly and well [illegible].

I desire to heartily acknowledge the value of your services in the improved administration of the land department which has been reached and to express my appreciation of the rugged and unyielding integrity which has characterized your official conduct. I am constrained to accept the resignation with regret, with assurance of my continued kindness toward you and with the hope and wish that wherever your future may lead you, [illegible] success and satisfaction. THE RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

How Much Work 4,100 Men Do—Pensions for Clerks Advocated.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 15.—The annual report of General Superintendent Nash of the railway mail service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, contains some interesting facts in regard to the operations of that very important branch of the postoffice department. Mail service was in operation during the year upon 114,560 miles of railroad, and on 3,[illegible] miles of water routes. To handle the mails while in transit on these routes 4,100 men were employed. There collected and distributed among the year [illegible] pieces of ordinary mail matter, besides 75,[illegible] registered packages, and [illegible] through registered pouches.

The errors in distribution amounted to one error to every 3,73[illegible] pieces. The year was marked by many casualties incident to the service. There were 14 derailments or wrecks of postal car trains. Three postal clerks were killed, twelve have seriously and [illegible] seriously injured.

Commending the [illegible] system, Superintendent Nash says: [illegible] in their [illegible] and in [illegible] on the Indian [illegible] and in [illegible] the [illegible] which threat is [illegible] clerks in [illegible] to make [illegible] in [illegible] in some [illegible] in [illegible].

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 15.—The annual report of United States Treasurer Hyatt was made public Thursday afternoon. The report reviews in great detail the financial operations of the year, the output of silver certificates, the coinage of trade dollars, extension of the loan depository system, improvement of service in the subtreasuries, etc. It is recommended that the postal revenue be turned into the treasury like other public moneys.

WOMEN TEMPERANCE WORKERS.

Proceedings at the Nashville Meeting—A Forest of Banners.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 18.—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union was opened [illegible] The following hymns were [illegible] "No state [illegible] shall be formed by any primary [illegible] of [illegible] by the National Woman's Christian Union; except that [illegible] subscribe to the total abstinence principle and to the prohibition of [illegible]." The treasurer, Miss Esther Pugh, [illegible] in her report that Mrs. Leavitt, the world-the-world missionary, has received [illegible] for her to defray her expenses [illegible] for her own use.

A [illegible] of leading workers [illegible] Washington in February, [illegible] was agreed to. The question of payment of dues to the National W. C. T. U. caused a lively discussion. The Iowa and Pennsylvania organizations refused to accept the decision of the convention that each member of the organizations must pay 10 cents per year instead of 5 cents, and there was some doubt as to whether the delegates from those states would be admitted. They were finally permitted to take their seats, but were barred from participating for the balance.

Mrs. Carse's elaborate report from Mrs. Carse, recording secretary, [illegible] was not presented. These were read by Mrs. Mary B. Case, of Illinois, to [illegible] of the respective sections of the United States showing the largest percentage of increase for the past year. Impromptu addresses were the order of the evening. The following states received banners: Massachusetts, [illegible] Ohio, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Kansas, and Tennessee. New York, for largest number of membership, took a banner also. Anna Gordon.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 18.—At the meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union Miss Frances E. Willard was re-elected president, by acclamation, which created great enthusiasm. The delegates sang and singing, "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow" with great fervor. Miss Willard was escorted to the chair by Mrs. Wakeley and introduced as "One John the Baptist."

A PROFESSIONAL BANK WRECKER.

Where He Has Worked His Schemes and His Modus Operandi.

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 18.—J. S. Danford is ravaging the interior towns of this state, and the small bankers are wild with rage and grief. Danford has, it is said, wrecked banks from Ohio to the Pacific coast and from Dakota to Alabama. His alleged scheme is to buy a bank, pay for it in bogus securities, get in all the money possible, fail and skip. A rope around his neck in Caldwell, Kan., made him disgorge $42,000 of $61,000 he had gobbled in this fashion. He has operated this scheme in Osage City and Caldwell, Kan.; Casey and Angus, Iowa; Portland and Frederick, Md.; Dalkeith, Ala.; Winchester, Tenn.; Smith's Grove, Ky.; Greenville, Charleston, Webster and Murphy, N. C.; Elberton, Ga., and other towns not recorded. His other "lay" is said to be in getting up cash subscriptions for various projects and suddenly decamping with the takings. He is said to be worth $250,000.

THE CZAR AT BERLIN.

He Pays a Visit to His Royal Brother and Talks to Bismarck.

BERLIN, Nov. 18.—Alexander III of Russia arrived here Friday, and was received with great pomp and parade. He was met at Wurtzburg by Prince William, "Unser Fritz," son, and at the Berlin station by a company of notables, including Gen. Von Moltke, and taken to the Russian embassy, where he was visited by the Emperor William. The visit was returned later, and the meeting of the two monarchs was cordial. A long interview took place the day between the czar and Bismarck, the significance of which has not transpired.

The extremely dangerous illness of the crown prince, Frederick William, seemed to cast a gloom over the entire city and the pageant (which attracted the entire city turned out), seemed to impress the onlookers more as a duty than a hearty ovation.

The czar and party took their departure for St. Petersburg at 10 o'clock in the evening.

They Tackled the Wrong Bank.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Nov. 18.—Charles R. Allen and Joe Jackson tried to rob the bank at Sanpete Thursday. They tried revolvers on Cashier Hague and Assistant Cashier Stone, but failed to intimidate those gentlemen, who gave the alarm and chased the robbers out without any. Jackson was pursued to the canyon and surrendered. Allred escaped, but was afterward caught in a cellar.

WHAT AM I TO DO?

The symptoms of Biliousness are unhappily but too well known. They differ in different individuals to some extent. A Bilious man is seldom a breakfast eater. Too frequently, alas, he has an excellent appetite for liquids but none for solids of a morning. His tongue will hardly bear inspection at any time; if it is not white and furred, it is rough, at all events.

The digestive system is wholly out of order and Diarrhœa or Consumption may be a symptom or the two may alternate. There are often Hemorrhoids or even loss of blood. There may be giddiness and often headache and acidity or flatulence and tenderness in the pit of the stomach. To correct all this if not effect a cure, try "Green's August Flower;" it costs but a trifle and thousands attest its efficacy.

Many of our aesthetic contemporaries are shocked at the return of the green postage stamps, but for our part we are always glad to welcome the green back.

I wish to tell you of the case of a girl 16 years old, who had been sick with suppression two years. Her father had paid over $500 for doctors' bills, still she was failing. She had the worst countenance that I have ever seen, a kind of greenish yellow, he was emaciated, had constant bowel trouble, and had to take morphine every night in order to sleep at all. All who saw her thought she would die. Her parents said they had done all they could; I repeatedly urged them to try Zoa-Phora, but they were strongly prejudiced against "nostrums." Finally the mother said, "We must do something, and this is as likely to help her as anything." She and I persuaded the father to let the girl try it. As a result in four months her injections were established and regular, and in six months she was the picture of health—a living wonder to all who had known her.

I could describe 20 other cases, not as wonderful as this, but still very remarkable cures.

Messrs. Warner & Shepard:

Both myself and my husband are using that medicine, "Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup," which you advised us to try. I used it for neuralgia and my husband took it for rheumatism. It has entirely cured both of us, so that we are now able to do our farm work and are in the best of health. We have recommended it to our neighbors, and they are using it with equally good results. It is one of the greatest remedies for the blood in the world, and for a lost appetite or a disordered stomach we don't believe there is anything equal to it.

The Dutch Emigrant Ship Scholten Sunk in Collision and 132 Lives Lost—Shameful Conduct Reported of the Sailors—Fearful Scenes on the Deck of the Doomed Vessel—Only Sixty-Eight of the Human Freight Saved.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—The Netherlands line steamship W. A. Scholten, which sailed from Rotterdam for New York Saturday, came into collision ten miles off Dover at 10 o'clock Saturday night with the steamer Rosemary, and sank almost immediately. The Scholten had on board passengers and crew to the number of 200, and of these only sixty-eight are known to have been saved. Among 132 twenty-seven have been landed at Dover, dead, and fears are entertained that the others were also lost, though a few of them may have been picked up by passing vessels.

As soon as the news of the disaster reached Dover vessels were sent to the rescue, but it does not as yet appear that, with the exception of the sixty-eight persons rescued and brought here by the steamer Edre, any lives have been saved. The steamer Rosemary is lying off Ramsgate with her bows badly stove and her timbers strained.

A dense fog prevailed when the collision occurred and the Scholten was moving at half speed. No warning before the collision was given, the sudden shock of the contact on the port bow having been the first intimation to the officers to the officers of the Dutch steamer of the proximity of another vessel. The officers of the Scholten deny that the passengers on board the steamer were in bed, but it is the fact, nevertheless, that most of them rushed upon the deck in their night clothes immediately after the collision.

As soon as the extent of the damage to the vessel was ascertained the order was given to lower the boats. The ship carried five boats, but only two of them were available, the other three being unseaworthy. The two sound boats were lowered and at the same time it was reported on deck that the ship was making water rapidly and must go down.

The scenes which followed this announcement were terrible beyond description. Shrieks, prayers, groans and curses mingled with the hoarse voices of the officers giving orders and the cries of children clinging to their mothers' skirts rendered still more heartrending the lamentation screams of the latter. The officers displayed admirable coolness, and remained on the bridge and at their posts of duty until the last, several of them, being provided with life belts, remaining until the vessel settled and leaping into the sea as she went down. Within twenty minutes after the two ships came together the Scholten was at the bottom of the channel.

All of the passengers and crew who had been fortunate enough to procure life belts floated and were picked up by the Edre's boats, which cruised around until 4 o'clock Sunday morning. There is scarcely a person among the rescued passengers who does not mourn the loss of a wife, husband, brother, sister or child, and in some cases only one member of a large family is found to have been saved. The survivors were supplied with clothing by the officers and crew of the Edre as far as possible, and additional garments were furnished to the unfortunate upon their arrival at Dover.

The bodies recovered and brought to Dover include those of a woman with a letter addressed, "I. Curtonz, Rue St. Gules, Brussels;" Solomon Goldsmith, a cigar dealer in London; —— Boring, of Washud; a man with the name "J. ——" marked on his linen; a Jew with a letter addressed "Sebensten Hermann, 198 Stanton street, New York;" a man with a letter addressed, "John Knochnel, Sandusky," and Henri Baue, of Ohio, the only cabin passenger on board, and a man named Friedmann, a merchant at Kowas. The others not yet identified are mostly women. Mrs. Lobenstein, Peter Stellberg, chief mate; Chief Stewardess Hak, and —— Dunitt, second steward.

Nearly all of the dead show evidences of having experienced great suffering, and many of them appear to have died from other causes than drowning.

The Scholten lies four miles off the Admiralty pier. Three masts are visible, and as her position is dangerous to navigation buoy-lights have been placed over the sunken vessel.

Mr. Moore, a passenger, says: "There were six English passengers on board the Scholten. One of them, a girl, asked us to keep together so that the English might go down together. I was in the water a long time before being picked up. The water was at freezing temperature and this fact undoubtedly hastened the death of many."

Another passenger says the steerage passengers became terror stricken and ran about the ship in wild confusion. The captain tried in vain to restore order among them, but they were not to be pacified. When the two boats were lowered these frenzied men and women rushed for them and were with great difficulty kept from sinking them.

Charles Mills, of Red Hill, Surrey, says the life boats appeared as if they had not been used for a long time. They had to be chopped away with axes, with the assistance of passengers. "I called out to those on the bridge to fire rockets," he continues. "It was a long time before they did. The greatest confusion prevailed. Women were thrown over on her port side before they fired the rockets. I waited until the waters touched the boilers, putting out the fires. Then I got hold of a coil, but a Dutch sailor snatched it away. We were all mixed together—foreigners and Europeans—clinging to one another in the water. I saw several drowned in this way, and had the greatest difficulty to keep clear of them. I gave a spar to a woman to hold on to. The Dutch sailors wanted to save themselves and even threw women aside. I can swim well and I swam about until I got to the Edre, when a rope was thrown to me. After the collision I went down into the cabin and woke two Dutch sailors, but they were paralyzed with terror and wouldn't get up, despite all entreaties. I heard other complaints about the conduct of the Dutch sailors. The confusion was extreme. Everybody seemed terror-stricken, this may account for the apparent want of discipline."

The Scholten was a first-class Clyde built steamship, thirteen years old, net tonnage 1,784, valued at about $250,000. She had accommodations for sixty cabin, forty intermediate and 600 steerage passengers. Her captain's name was Taats, and this was his first trip on her, he being one of the best. He was an experienced officer, but had suffered one or two disasters previously.

Go to the Opera House this evening and give the band boys a lift.

There will be a dontion for the benefit of the Rev. A. W. Stalker, at the residence of Lester Collier, on Wednesday, Nov. 30th, 1887. All are cordially invited.

The president and secretary of the Southern Michigan G. A. R. association have issued a call for a meeting of the executive committee, to be held in the city hall, in Adrian, on Friday, December 30th, 1887, at one p. m., for the purpose of locating the place and fixing the time of holding the next annual encampment, and transacting such other business as may properly come before the committee. Commanders of posts that have not elected members of the executive committee, ought to do so at once, and forward their names to the secretary, and see that a representative of the post is present at the meeting.

Below is the letter from L. H. Dean of Detroit to Dr. Loree, which was read at the Hall Library association last week. It will doubtless be interesting to many who were not present at that time:

DETROIT, MICH., Nov. 14th, '87.

DR. D. W. LOREE, Ridgeway, Mich.

MY DEAR BROTHER: I regret to say it will not be possible for us to get to Ridgeway on Nov. 16th to enjoy with you and the rest of the people, the dedication of the Hall Memorial Library, but we rejoice that so noble a specimen of christian manhood as Jonathan Hall ever lived, and we congratulate the people of Ridgeway that a munificent a public gift has befallen them. An old friend of ours whom we first knew in the fall of 1857, as a very young man away from home attending school, yet lives in our memory; he had the support and counsel and prayers of a christian mother; his name was and is R. T. Bush.

As for the people of Ridgeway, so far as they may be concerned, it is my opinion they have abundant reason to thank God that from two pioneer Christian families of Michigan came the honored, useful and benevolent pair, Mr. Rufus T. and Mrs. Melinda Hall Bush. It is my earnest desire and prayer that the blessings of God may continue to be upon Mr. and Mrs. Bush and their families, and that their benediction may prove a lasting blessing to the people of Ridgeway.

Yours Truly,
L. H. DEAN.

Several important matters were crowded out last week to make room for the Ridgeway dedication. We have caught up this week however and can eat our turkey to day with a clear conscience.

The dance at the Armory Hall last evening proved to be a very successful affair. About fifty couple participated, the music was tip top, all enjoyed themselves, and Co. C. made a nice little sum for their treasury.

James Curry's barber shop is rightly named a tonsorial parlor now. Since the recent improvements it does a man good to sit there and read the papers a while, to say nothing of getting a slick shave and a nobby hair cut which he is sure to get in that establishment.

Please notice the announcement given in this week's paper of Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop's lecture at the Opera House, Tuesday evening, Dec. 6th. Also, look in next week's paper for the precise date of St. John's lecture, as we are assured of his being here between the 4th and 11th of Dec.

A meeting of the Anti-Drive Well association of Defiance and Wiliams counties has been called at Bryan, Thursday, November 24, at 1 p. m. The occupation of that association is gone, unless it has assets to divide. At all events the proposed meeting on Thanksgiving Day will be in time to eat turkey and give thanks that the driven well fraud has burst. Toledo Bee.

The members of the Tecumseh W. C. T. U. are requested to give a full attendance at our meeting this week, that arrangements may be completed for entertaining the delegates to the County Convention to be held at this place, Dec. 6th and 7th. Our own delegates are also to be appointed. The meeting is held each week on Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock, in one of the small rooms in the basement of the M. E. church.

The hopes of Fort Wayne, Ind., for finding natural gas in that vicinity have been revived, and it is now proposed to sink one of their abandoned wells deeper in the belief that they may be as fortunate as the people of Auburn, who went through the first stratum of Trenton Rock, through salt water, and 500 feet below it struck a vein which by a steam gauge shows a pressure of 200 pounds in ten minutes, 300 pounds in 20 minutes, and 400 pounds in an hour. There are instances in other localities where good veins of gas have been found by going below what has heretofore been regarded as the limit of the gas field, and it is within the bounds of possibility that similar results might follow in a few abandoned wells in other places.—Toledo Bee.

The large sized U. S. Capitol photographs placed in the hotels last week by Mr. C. W. Batchare beauties. Mr. Batch understands his business thoroughly. The forthcoming Christmas Number of Harper's Magazine will be the most princely descendant of its royal line, with the noble blood of many kings of thought throbbing its arteries, and richly decked in sumptuous attire of illustrations. In point of attractive reading and luxuriant drawings it takes the palm even from previous holiday numbers of "The Giant of the Monthlies."

The Michigan Business Men's Association is an organization first started at Grand Rapids with associate branches in many of the cities and towns throughout the state. These several branches are chartered by the central organization at Grand Rapids and then work on a harmonious plan. There are now in existence in the state 101 of these auxiliary associations. Hudson is moving to organize one, and the matter has been canvassed considerably here in Tecumseh. We believe it would be an excellent thing. We shall have more to say on the subject hereafter.

LOCAL OPTION.

At a [illegible] meeting of the Ministerial Association of Tecumseh Nov. 21st, the following resolution was adopted, and as Secretary of the Association, I am directed to publish the action in the papers of the village.

Resolved, That in view of the evil continually wrought by the Liquor Traffic, and the desirability of bringing it to speedy termination, we the members of the Ministerial Association of Tecumseh, comprising members from Tecumseh, Clinton, Franklin, Ridgeway and Raisin, hereby express our hope that an effort may soon be made to bring a vote on local option in this county, and pledge ourselves to give our signatures to such a call.

T. H. PERRIN, Chairman.
F. ADKINS, Secretary.

I may add, by way of explanation of the object of the above action that it is, as I understand it, that the members of the Association may place themselves on record as ready to encourage, by their personal influence, every lawful effort, which it is possible for the people to make to destroy this notorious business. Less than this they feel they cannot do as consistent Temperance men. Probably no members of the Association would wish to be understood as at all satisfied with the present law, or unaware of its weakness and imperfections of its provisions. If, however, we cannot at present have State prohibition, we can have county prohibition. Should not all friends of prohibition unite to strike every blow that can be struck toward the attainment of our great object?

F. ADKINS, Secretary.

ST. JOHN IS COMING.

Ex-Gov. St. John of Kansas will speak in Tecumseh at some date early in December. The temperance people of this section should make preparation to give him a royal welcome. Here is what the California Voice says about him.

There are differences in lecturers. Some are dear at any price. Others are cheap at any price. Ex-Gov. St. John is one of the latter. There are very many excellent lecturers who are doing good work and getting badly paid for it. There are others, who are getting higher rates and are equally poorly paid considering the circumstances and ability of the lecturers and the results of the lectures. St. John is one of the latter. Without saying a single word to disparage the very efficient work done by the noble lecturers who have done valiant and heroic service here in the past, it can truthfully be asserted that no Prohibition party lecturer has ever been here who has universally drawn such immense crowds, and made so many converts, disarmed the opposition and infused so much life and enthusiasm into the old guard of the Prohibition forces. To-day the Prohibition party in this State has a life and force as never before and the powerful pulsations thereof are throbbing with a vigor and might prophetic of far greater vitality, influence and power to come. All this is worth what cannot be calculated in dollars. From some comparatively small places they write, "St. John's lecture was worth $1000 here." A minister said "I would not have missed that lecture for $10." A correspondent in another place says, "St. John's lecture here was worth to us and to this place all the money he will receive for all his lectures in this State." And more in similar strains.

W. C. T. U. Convention

The Convention of the Lenawee County W. C. T. U. will be held at the M. E. church at Tecumseh Dec. 6 and 7th. First session will commence promptly at 2 o'clock P. M. Tuesday. The meeting will continue through Wednesday till nearly 4 o'clock.

Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop of Jackson, president of the State W. C. T. U. will address the people at the Opera House Tuesday evening, Dec. 6th. Every body is invited to attend. A collection will be taken at the close of the meeting.

M. C. WOOD, President.

Give Away the Passwords.

The Grand Army of the Republic has been in existence scarcely twenty years, and in all that time its countersigns have been held sacred by the comrades until this year, when it was given away by a blundering or drunken fool at St. Louis. This individual, whether high or low in the order, should be promptly court-martialed and dismissed from the ranks and placed where he never again can obtain a secret to give away. This exposure has caused a great deal of trouble, and outside sentinels have been obliged to use the greatest caution to keep out impostors and eaves-droppers. Commanders of posts have been obliged to retire all visiting comrades without vouchers, and many dropped members have improved the occasion to get into posts where they were unknown, and thus mingle with the comrades and obtain the secrets of the order.

To offset this trouble hundreds of posts have adopted a post countersign, and no one except a comrade well known can get beyond the outside picket without the calling of the officer of the guard and the closest examination. The result is that many worthy but unknown comrades have found themselves refused admission into post meeting.—N. Y. Star.

FAMILY REUNION

large number of relatives gathered at the residence of Mr. Lewis V. Miller, in Macon, the occasion being the celebration of his 81st birthday.

There were present eight children, three sons-in-law, [illegible] daughters-in-law, ten grand children, two great grand children, and two nieces, making a total of 31 persons, named as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Dan B. Miller, Ivory, Oscoda Co., Mich., Mr. and J. W. Slaght, of Lodi, Washtenaw Co., N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Osgood and two children, of Holloway, Mich., Mrs. T. H. Miller and four children, of Macon, Mr. M. J. Martin, three children, son-in-law and two grandchildren of Macon, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Miller, of Adrian, Mich., Mr. and Mrs. Fred N. Miller, of Hudson, Mich., Mrs. Jeremy Rickenbach, of Ann Arbor, Mich., Mrs. John Brake, of Kalamazoo, Mich., and the home family, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. M. Ler. Ella, Emma and Voorhees.

The visitors intended to give the old gentlemen a surprise, but the matter of fact way in which he received them, really played the surprise on the other side. To say that those present had a good time would hardly express the idea we wish to convey. It was more than that. It was a happy and joyous reunion of kindred friends, some of whom had not met before for years.

After the usual greetings, the company settled down for an enjoyable time, all feeling perfectly at home. In due time dinner was announced, and soon all were seated at a table loaded with a bountiful repast, to which ample justice was done. After dinner, while the "company" were standing or sitting in groups conversing, they were startled all at once by the bursting forth of "Home, Sweet Home" issuing from a Cornet Band just outside the house. There was a general rush for the doors, when it was found that the music came from seven instruments in the hands of seven of the Miller family. They managed to set the instruments and pass them out of the window, thereby giving the company an agreeable surprise. They played several pieces nicely, although they have had their instruments but a short time.

To the above might be added that three grand children were not present, and that two children and two grand children have crossed over the river in which there is no recrossing.

That all that participated in this happy event may live to see it repeated is the sincere wish of the writer of this article.

DRIVEN WELL PATENTS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.

The supreme court of the United States today rendered a decision in what is known as the "drive well" patent case. The case came to the supreme court on an appeal from a decision of the United States Circuit court for the southern district of Iowa. The decree of the circuit court was against the validity of the patent originally issued to Nelson W. Green. The supreme court to-day affirmed this decree of the Iowa circuit court on the ground that the invention was used in public more than two years before the application for the patent.

The driven well patent has been a nightmare for the farmers of the country for two years, or ever since the holders of the patent began to take active steps to recover their royalties. It was estimated that there were 8,000,000 wells in the country which would be affected by it, and as a royalty of $10 per well was to be collected it is apparent that there was a pot of money in it.

Only last week the patentees aroused Michigan, with circulars recounting the various decisions in their favor, and abusing Gov. Luce as an idiot and a crook, because he has kept the grange in fighting trim against the patentees. Now the governor can laugh.

Let The World Know.

We learn through our exchanges and other reliable sources that Dr. Barber, of Iowa, a physician of considerable note, has produced a perfect pain remedy. He says, "In the vegetable kingdom there exist three properties, and I have found them." This proves that there is a shield from every pain a balm for every wound. The wonderful healing powers of this medicine, it is said, extend to all distressing ailments.

A company has been formed at Lincoln, Nebraska, for its manufacture, under the name of "Sailor and Remedy Company," which name the medicine bears.

Hon. E. G. D. Holden, ex-Secretary of State, has just composed a new poem. The poem, with pictorial illustrations, will be mailed to any address by the Aldine Manf'g. Co., of Grand Rapids. This Co. make the Aldine Fire Place. It is a perfect ventilator, keeps fire warm, equalizes the temperature from floor to ceiling, and keeps fire through the night as well as a hard coal stove. Many of our prominent citizens are putting them into their residences and places of business.

Opinion of an Expert.

John Wanamaker, the great Philadelphia [illegible] advertising, as follows

"I never in my life used such a thing as a poster, or dodger, or hand bill. My plan for the last fifteen years has been to buy so much space in a newspaper, and [illegible] I would not give an advertisement in a newspaper with 400 circulation for 5,000 dodgers or posters. If I wanted to run a cheap jewelry store or lottery scheme I might use posters but I would not insult a decent reading public with hand bills. The class of people who read such things are poor material to look to for success in mercantile affairs. I deal direct with the publishers. I say to them How long will you let me run a column of matter through your paper for $50, or [illegible] he is not trying to make more than his share I give him the copy. I owe my success to the newspapers, and to them I shall freely give a certain profit of my yearly business."

Card of Thanks.

The undersigned, brother and sister of the late Wm. A. Fleming, who died in this place on the 16th inst., take this method of expressing their most sincere thanks to the many friends of deceased who so kindly and generously rendered them assistance in the hour of their greatest need; especially to Mr. and Mrs. Knapp, to Dr. Catlin for his faithful attention to relieve the sufferings of our brother, to Mr. Sweet who was so efficient in providing watches and rendering other assistance, and to all who in any way contributed to the comfort of deceased, or relief of his friends. That the richest blessings of Him who said "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these ye did it unto me" shall be the prayer of

FOR HONOR'S SAKE.

"I was not," he said, "and I am not aware that it is known."

"It is nevertheless a fact," I said, "and it is also known that you, Mr. Bainbridge, are the foreman who held out in Mr. Layton's favor."

"These matters should not be revealed," he muttered.

"Perhaps not," I said, "but we must go with the age in which we live. Mr. Layton's case has excited the greatest interest. The singular methods he adopted during so many years in his life, and the final vindication of the ... interest, and I have not the slightest doubt that there will be a great deal said and written upon the subject."

"Which should not be said and written," muttered Mr. Rutland.

"Neither have I the slightest doubt," I continued, "that your name will be freely used, and your motives for not waiving your opinion when eleven men were against you freely discussed. We are speaking here, if you will allow me to say so, as friends of the unfortunate man, and I have no hesitation in declaring to you that I myself believe in his innocence."

He interrupted me.

"Then, if you had been on the jury, you would not have yielded to the opinions of eleven, or of 1,200 men?"

He spoke coarsely, and I saw that it would be a satisfaction to him to obtain support in his view of the case.

"I am not so sure," I said; our private opinion of a man when he is placed before his country charged with a crime has nothing whatever to do with the evidence brought against him. Let us suppose, for instance, that you have been at some time or other, prior to your fortunate circumstances, associated with Mr. Layton."

"Who asserts that?" he cried, much disturbed.

"No person that I am aware of," I replied. "I am merely putting a case, and I will prove to you presently that I have a reason for doing so. I say, I repeat, that under more fortunate circumstances you were acquainted with Mr. Layton, and that you had grown to esteem him. What has that purely personal view to do with your functions as a juryman?"

"Mr. Bainbridge," he said, "I do not wish to be discourteous, but I cannot continue this conversation."

"Nay," I urged, "a gentleman's life and honor are at stake, and I am endeavoring to befriend him. I am not the only one who is interested in him. There are others, thousands of miles away across the seas, who are desirous and anxious to make a sacrifice, if by that sacrifice they can clear the honor of a friend. See, Mr. Rutland, I will place implicit confidence in you. Last night I received a cable from America, from Mr. Archibald Laing."

"Mr. Archibald Laing!" he cried, taken by surprise. "Why, he and Mr. Layton were"——

But he suddenly stopped, as though fearful of committing himself.

"Were once friends," I said, finishing the sentence for him, and I was certain, finishing it aright. "Yes, I should certainly say so. Read the cable I received." And I handed it to him.

At first he seemed as if he were disinclined, but he could not resist his curiosity, and after a slight pause in addition he read the message. But he handed it back to me without a mark.

"Mr. Archibald Laing," I said, "as I dare say you have heard or read, is one of fortune's favorites. He left this country three or four years ago, and settled in America, where I believe he has taken out letters of patent, which has made him a millionaire. No further evidence than the cable message is needed to prove that."

"A man I cannot remember. Why does he ask me to apply to you for information concerning Mr. Layton, which I very probably turn to that unhappy gentleman's advantage?"

"I was but slightly acquainted with Mr. Laing," said Mr. Rutland. "He and I were never friends. I repeat once more that I have nothing to tell you."

"I recognized then that I was in the presence of a man who, whether rightly or wrongly, was not to be moved from any decision at which he had arrived, and I understand thoroughly the impossible task set before eleven jurymen to win him over to their convictions.

"Can I urge nothing," I said, "to induce you to speak freely to me?"

"Nothing," he replied.

I spent another quarter of an hour endeavoring to prevail upon him, but in the result I left his house no wiser than I had entered it, except that I was convinced he knew something which he was deservedly concealing from me. I did not think it was anything of very great importance, but it might at least be a clew that I could work upon, and I was both discouraged and incensed by his determined attitude.

On the following morning, having paved the way to further access to Mr. Edward Layton, I visited the unhappy man in his prison. He was unaffectedly glad to see me, and he took the opportunity of expressing his cordial thanks for the friendliness I had evinced toward him. I felt it necessary to be on my guard with him, and I did not, thus early, make any endeavor to prevail upon him to accept me as his counsel in the new trial which awaited him. There were one or two points upon which I wished to assure myself, and I approached them gradually and cautiously.

"Are you aware," I said, "of the extent of the disagreement among the jury?"

"Well," he replied, "we heard some things even within these stone walls. I am told that eleven were against me and one for me."

"Yes," I said, "that is so."

"A bad look-out for me when I am tried again, Mr. Bainbridge," he said, "it is very kind of you to visit me here, and I think you do so with friendly intent."

"Indeed," I said, "it is with friendly intent."

"But of any use," he then said, "for me to declare to you that I am innocent of the horrible charge brought against me?"

"I don't know," I said, "whether it is of any use or not, because of the stand you have taken and seemed determined to take."

"Yes," he said, "upon my next trial I shall defend myself, as I did on my last. I will accept no legal assistance whatever. Still, as a matter of interest and curiosity—looking upon myself as if I were somebody else—tell me frankly your own opinion."

"Frankly and honestly," I replied, "I believe you to be an innocent man."

"Thank you," he said, and I saw the

"Do you happen," I said presently, "to know the name of the juryman who was in your favor?"

"No," he replied. "I am quite ignorant of the names of the jurymen."

"Do you when called your fellows the trial commenced?"

"Yes, that is the usual course, I believe, but I did not hear their names. Indeed, I paid to heed to them. Of what interest would they have been to me? Twelve strangers were twelve strangers; one was no different from the other."

"They were all strangers to you?" I asked, resuming a purposed carelessness of tone.

"Yes, every one of them."

"And you to them?"

"I suppose so. How could it have been otherwise?"

"But when they finally came back into court, and the foreman of the jury stated that they could not agree, you seemed surprised?"

"Why, you"——

"Do you not think it natural," I said, in reply, "that every person's eyes at that moment should be turned upon you?"

"Of course," he said, recovering himself—"quite natural. I should have done the same myself had I been in a better place than the dock. Well, I was surprised; I fully anticipated a verdict of guilty."

"And," I continued, "although you may not remember it, you leaned forward and gazed at the jury with an appearance of eagerness."

"I remember that I did so," he said; "it was an impulsive movement on my part."

"Did you recognize any among them whose face was familiar to you?"

"No; to tell you the truth I could not distinguish their faces. I am so short sighted."

"But you had your glasses hanging round your neck. Why did you not use them?"

It amazed me to hear him launch at this question. It was a genuine, hearty laugh, but none the less was I astonished at it.

"You lawyers are so sharp," he said. "What there is scarcely hiding anything from you. Be cured by what questions you ask me, or I shall be convinced"—and here his voice grew sad—"to beg of you not to come again."

I held myself well within control, although his admonition startled me, for I heard in my mind to ask him something concerning the surprise he had evinced when the nine of hearts was produced from the pockets of his ulster; and I had it also in my mind to ask him whether he was acquainted, either directly or indirectly, with Mr. James Rutland. His caution made me cautious; its warmth made me wary. I seemed to be pitted against him in a friendly contest in which I was engaged in his interests, and he was engaged against them.

"I will be careful," I said; "you must not close your door against me, although it is, unhappily, a prison door. I am here truly as a sympathizing friend. Look upon me in that light, and not in the light of a professional man."

"You comfort me," he said. "Although I may appear to you careless and indifferent, you know well enough it is impossible that I can be so; you know that I must be tearing my heart out in the terrible ordeal in which I have been forced by ruthless circumstances. Make no mistake, I am myself greatly to blame for what has occurred. It has been forced upon me by my sense of honor and right and truth. Why, life once spread itself before me with a prospect so rich, so beautiful, that it almost awed me. But, after all, if a man bears within him the assurance that he is doing what he ought, an honor bound to do, surely that should be something. There—you see what comfort I derive from me. Yes, I did look carefully for a friend when I heard the jury could not agree. At least, there was one man there who believed me to be innocent, and without the slightest hesitation I thanked him for the belief."

He gazed round with the air of a man who was fearful that every word he made was watched and observed by unfriendly and unseen eyes.

"I need a friend."

I replied, instantly, following the tone that he had used,

"I am here. I will be your friend."

"It is a simple service I require," he said, "I have a letter ready for me when I wish to be posted. What it contains concerns no one whom you know. It is my affair, and mine only, and rather than make it another man's I would be buried at the stake, though we don't live in such barbarous times, and then he added, with a sigh, "that they are in charge enough."

"I will post the letter for you," I said.

He looked me in the face, a long, searching, wistful look, and as he gazed I saw in his eyes a duality of spirit which gave me to him in sympathy and admiration as I had ever been drawn in my life to any man.

"Dare I trust you?" he said, still preserving his low tone. "But if not, who shall I trust?"

"You may trust me," I said; "I will post the letter for you faithfully."

"I will place it in the postbag," he said. "Not in the district. Put it into a letter box in a remote district from this spot."

"I will do as you direct."

"Quickly and secretly," he said.

"Quickly," I repeated, "and secretly, as between man and man."

"You are a good fellow," he said, "I will trust you. I can make no promise to repay you, but one day, perhaps, yet may live to be glad that you did me even this slight service." And he slipped the letter into my hand, which I as secretly slipped into my pocket. Then I said:

"May I come to see you again?"

"Do. You have lightened the day for me—and many a day in addition to this."

Soon afterwards I left him. I was heartily satisfied in the carrying out of his directions. I did not take the letter from my pocket until I was quite three miles from the prison, and then I put it into a pillar box, but before I deposited it there I ... the address. Layton had not extracted a promise from me that I should not do so, and I will not say, for certain, whether, if he had, I should have violated it. I was engaged, against his will and wish, in his vital interests, and I might have broken such a promise, however that may be my surmise was overwhelming when I saw that his letter was addressed to "Miss Mabel Rutland, 32 Lavender Terrace, South Kensington."

Rutland! Why, that was the name of the one juryman who had held out against Layton's trial, and from whom I had vainly endeavored to obtain some useful information. Of all the cases I had been engaged in, this promised to be not only the most momentous, but the most important and interesting. Rutland, Rutland! Had it been a common name, such as Smith or Jones, I might not have been so stirred. It was no choice coincidence. I was on the track, and with all the powers of my intellect I determined to carry it to a successful issue.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS

Lesson for November 27.

NOTES. "At that season." It marks some particular time during this same summer. That is all we know. Refer to Mark ii. 23, and Luke vi. 1-5. who narrate this story [illegible] "Cornfields," or fields of grain. Our American corn was unknown in Palestine. The fields were of wheat or barley. "Began to pluck ears of corn," Luke adds, "rubbing them in their hands." They ate the raw grains. It was allowable to pluck ears of corn in any man's field (Robinson says it is allowable to this present day). "The Pharisees." Spies set to catch Jesus in any trivial oversight [illegible] the Sabbath. They could not bring forth the charge of stealing, but they could charge them with a violation of the law which forbade working on the Sabbath (Exod. xx. 10). It was a derivative crime. To pluck was a kind of reaping. To rub a kind of threshing. So the Pharisees built up so many externalities as to convert the Sabbath into a day of spiritual torture. Christ and his disciples were liberal enough to break away from such meaningless rules.—"Have you not read" (in 1 Sam. xxi, 1-6.) A bit of caustic irony.—"When he was hungered." A case of like necessity. Have ye not read in the law (Num. xxviii, 9; Lev. xxiv, 8.) It was one of the sayings of the rabbis "There is no Sabbath [illegible] in the temple." Thus the [illegible] profanation by the [illegible] selves.—"But I say [illegible] appeals now to the sup[illegible] authority [illegible] greater than the temple [illegible] Lord of the Sabbath. He instituted it, he interpreted it, [illegible] merged into the "Lord's Day." The narrative beginning with verse 9 occurred probably on some following Sabbath. It is also told in Mark [illegible] "Why are ye [illegible] impossible to conceive that [illegible] prescribed in deities [illegible] blind [illegible] Is it lawful to do on the Sabbath days?" [illegible] "stunned [illegible] saying nearly of or the most purely [illegible] the Sabbath. He read [illegible] on the spot," they said, "put him into a vinegar, to spit it out again, but to swallow it down." Christ appeals to them to [illegible] common sense [illegible] "Are they of [illegible] teacher who was [illegible] their traditions.

INTERPRETATION. The narrative carefully avoids saying that Jesus plucked even the grain himself. He had a right to do so. Yet he refrained from giving the Pharisees a ground for personal accusation. Christians have an right to the right to do many of the things others do. It is the office of each one's cultivated common sense to tell him when to refrain from using his obvious rights, lest he may get himself into a hornet's nest of misunderstandings.

There are such busy bodies to-day as of old, to spy out what struggling Christians are doing, that they may put the worst possible construction on innocent acts. What characters are more despicable than those who are continually looking for faults and flaws wherever they cast their malignant eyes? This sin has its beginning in querulousness and petty judgments. Take care! "Cast out first the beam out of thine own eye."

Jesus did not discard the old Sabbath. He vitalized it. He gave it a new meaning. God's day and man's day are now for the first time one. Many agitate a Continental Sunday with all its amusements to divert the laboring man. That would not be God's day. The most complete rest is found in a total relaxation from one's peculiar weekly work and in a turning of the heart to the things of God.

But mere spiritual reflection is not enough to sanctify the Lord's day. That is good to start on. It is a practical, helpful helping hand goodness, whether in the Sunday-school, or among the poor, that the individual and the churches are in need of.

So let Sunday be the culminating day of the week in spiritual communion with Christ, and in that personal helpfulness and prayerfulness, on which the Christian's success depends.

The Sabbath is for all. Who will dare deprive others of its beneficent privileges?

Let each Lord's day be so sacred and helpful that others would eagerly enjoy it as you do.

At present a gang of hands are at work resurrecting Engine No. 15, and getting her back on the track. On Sunday night, as engineer Engels approached the turntable, the throttle valve lever slipped from the notches that holds it when shut off, and before Mr. Engels could control his engine it shot across the turntable, landing its whole length in Lafe Rappleye's wheatfield, leaving the tender on the table. The engine was buried in the mud two or three feet. No one was hurt, and nothing broken to amount to much but the end of the table, which is a worthless and poorly constructed affair to say the least of it. Notwithstanding that Mr. Engles had run three days and nights in succession without sleep, he took engine No. 13 and made his trip to the new road in Ohio, Sunday night.

A visit to my dear old uncle and aunt Libni and Lydia Kelley, last week, found them well as usual and hearty. He being 89 years of age and aunt a few years younger, enjoying her second eyesight and who can see to read and work better than she could twenty years ago, and also knitting very fine mittens I have a pair of and I think no one would dare try to beat them, besides nice long stockings for herself and children and grandchildren, equal to the best. Uncle has sawed with a bucksaw, split and piled up over 20 cords of stove wood this fall, besides being overseer and general manager while his son Allen was away threshing wheat, oats an clover seed. But the best of it all is they enjoy saving faith, and love to talk and meditate upon it. The Lord is good and his mercy endureth for ever. Respectfully,

Mrs. M. A. WILSON.

"Ha! Ha!" Some more "smart stuff" from our web-footed Macon friend. Well now, that is real nice. We presume if any of the editors of the large daily papers should happen to see that article they would not rest a minute until they had engaged the writer of the same to work for them.

It may be that we are not sane, but if we are not very much mistaken, "Statement No. 2" shows up pretty big for your being afflicted with the same, or else "softening of the brain." We think probably it is the latter. "Oh no," we will not take any of that dose for ourselves for we know you need it so badly that it would leave you in a very critical condition. You may maintain all the facts you like and we will try to do the same. Now you say the report sent by the Lake Ridge correspondent was correct, and we emphatically say it was not. Do you understand? You must remember it is invidious to judge others by yourself, therefore don't accuse us of wearing spectacles like yourself.

Of course there would be no use of our trying to scare you, as "those that know nothing, fear nothing." We would respectfully advise you to go out on some back alley and throw mud at yourself, as that is evidently the occupation the creator intended you should fulfill on this earth. Therefore as life is short, be about it and he will probably have something more about as respectable for you after you leave this one. Once in two weeks will do us too, so go ahead and shoot your big gun and we will try to return the amount of ammunition you use.

The Literary society will meet at L. E. Tayler's, Dec. 2. A somewhat lengthy programme will be presented including vocal and instrumental music etc., after which the question, "Resolved that gold is more beneficial than iron," will be discussed.

The evening at E. J. Whelan's was a very enjoyable one, Nov. 18. A goodly number were present and the efforts of the young people and little ones, as well as the older ones was received with sympathy and pleasure. The query box was full and running over with questions, conundrums and problems, whose answers instructed and amused, and the few moments devoted to this work were very pleasant ones indeed. After this followed intermission and—apples. The discussion of the question, "Resolved that the pen has been more beneficial than the plough," was a little dull owing to the absence of some of the disputants, and resulted in the victory for the negative.

DEATH OF CAPT. H. R. CASE.

One of the oldest, best known and most highly valued citizens of Cambridge, passed away Friday, Dec. 18th. Capt. Harmon R. Case, for many years one of the substantial, good men of his town is no more. For a number of years Capt. Case had shown evidence of failing health and had expressed to others his realization of the shortness of time left to him. The cause of his illness and death was a disease of the kidneys.

Capt. Case was born in what is now Broomfield, Hartford county, Conn., April 10, 1818. In 1833, he with his brother Galusha walked from Broomfield to Ashtabula, Ohio, Galusha having $17 and Hermon about $25, which constituted their worldly wealth. The latter, in the spring of 1834, engaged as a sailor on board of the schooner, "Morning Star," and sailed the lakes till the year 1849. He became a captain in 1838 and commanded the schooner "Hiram." The last vessel under his command was the schooner "General Houston" which sailed between Toledo and Oswego. Capt. Case purchased a farm in Cambridge in 1848, but did not quit the lakes till the following year. He owned at the time of his death, between four and five hundred acres of farm lands with good buildings. He leaves three children, two daughters and a son, Marion, the latter having always resided with his father.

The funeral of Capt. Case was held Sunday, Nov. 20th, at the Episcopal church at Cambridge Junction.

A FAMOUS POLITICAL CONTEST WON AT ATLANTA, GA.

Remarkable Scenes at the Polls in the Struggle Between the "Wets" and "Drys." The Colored Vote a Thing Worth Having and How It Was Worked for—The "Wets" Win.

ATLANTA, GA., Nov. 26.—After the most heated contest on record in the state of Georgia, Atlanta voted against Prohibition Saturday. The fight has been a peculiarly bitter one. For over a month the citizens have been engaged in the conflict. Meetings have been held every night, and local speakers and foreign statesmen have stumped the county from almost every curbstone in the city and every cross-roads in the county.

Early in the campaign the Prohibitionists leased the largest warehouse in the city and fitted it up with seating capacity for 8,000 people. Almost nightly the building has been filled, and such scenes of wild enthusiasm are rarely witnessed. Among the prominent Prohibition speakers who plunged into the fight early in the campaign was United States Senator A. H. Colquitt and Editor H. W. Grady. These were assisted in almost every minister in the city, who preached Prohibition from their pulpits Sunday after Sunday to deeply interested congregations.

The most prominent leaders of the antis were Senator Joseph E. Brown, Capt. E. P. Howell and Capt. John P. Goodwin. Both sides had full campaign funds and managed their respective causes for all they were worth. The negro vote was the bone of contention and was the balance of power.

EVAN P. HOWELL.

One of the features of the contest has been the active part taken by many women of the city. At early dawn on Saturday bands of women stationed themselves near the six polls at which the people were to vote upon the question of the sale of liquor. As the first ballots began falling into the boxes, the women began singing familiar Methodist hymns. All day long the most remarkable scenes were enacted. White women engaged in conversation with negros, whom they had never seen before, urging them to deposit their ballots against the sale. At one precinct was gathered a representative bevy of women. One girl, a chubby-faced blonde and blue-eyed, stood leaning against a door-post, while with an arm twined around her white sister's waist stood a colored Hebe, whose fine proportions were admired by all the men who passed. As this group of white and black posed in saucy embrace, two colored dudes, hat in hand, stood in the front yard passing the usual compliments of the season. Just outside the gate stood a huge black man with his back against the fence. In front of him stood a white woman patting him on the breast and begging him to "vote for Jesus." An old negro, who happened to be passing, threw up his hands as he looked upon this scene and exclaimed: "Bless de Lord, I've lived to see de cullud folks as good as de whites."

As early as 5 o'clock voters began to congregate about the voting places, and it is said that not a few spent the night at the polls. Before 7 o'clock long lines formed at each of the six city polls, and when the town clock struck 7 the balloting began. Both sides had out a number of carriages. The antis placards bore the legend, "Bring prosperity back to Atlanta, vote for the sale." On the Prohibition carriages were the words: "For Prohibition."

The lunch-rooms run under the auspices of the Prohibition ladies were crowded all day, and good lunches were furnished the men who worked at the polls. A band of little girls wearing blue badges marched up to the court house at 1:30 o'clock, and sang several hymns. Quite a sensation was caused by their appearance.

There were decided apprehensions of trouble, and numerous charges of fraud and purchase of votes on both sides. It is the general conviction that if a row had been started it would have been a bloody one.

During the morning several women and girls assembled near the voting places. There were about fifteen altogether, and as the voters marched up to the polls they would sing such songs as "Bringing in the Sheaves," "Jesus Will Carry You Through," etc. The singing was under the supervision of the Rev. H. W. Beville, a member of Hunter Street Christian church. Directly behind the women and girls who were singing was a large sign painted on the door of a former wine-room: "Michigan Beer on Ice." All the preachers worked hard with the crowds. The exhorters, the cranks and the politicians struggled with them to vote "dry," but with an enthusiasm which would not brook restraint the citizens broke away and voted for the sale. The negroes especially resented what they looked upon as an infringement upon their personal rights.

The hero of the day was Capt. Evan P. Howell. Wherever he appeared great crowds would gather around him. Toward night the women and the preachers began to retire, and by 7 o'clock the fight was given up. The official majority for the sale is 1,446.

When the result of the fight was known thousands upon thousands of white and colored people assembled in the streets with torches and brass bands. The jubilant throng made night hideous. There were, however, very few people arrested for drunkenness. The men who led the great forces to victory were serenaded and compelled to make speeches. The tenor of their addresses was the same. They were rejoiced that Atlanta had been freed from the domination of the scalp and the crank, but counselled moderation on the part of the victors.

Mr. Grady, in common with Judge Hillyer, Rev. H. H. and other prominent leaders of the defeated cause, says he will acquiesce gracefully in the result. Many preachers devoted part of their sermons Sunday to the defeat of Prohibition. Dr. Lee made a thoughtful and conservative talk, while Dr. Hawthorne was vituperative. One of his remarks was: "The whisky ring is gloating over its triumph, and the anti-Prohibitionists are like toads who fall from their beds with warts on a log and

It is said by a contractor here that he has, since the result was announced, been ordered to begin buildings the aggregate cost of which will be $[illegible]. Ordinary Calhoun believes the law will go into effect at once, and two-thirds of the best lawyers in Atlanta agree with him. It is generally believed that it will not take effect for some months, and will come up in court.

BLACKBURN, OF KENTUCKY.

He Thinks Cleveland Will Be Renominated and The Live Democrat.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Nov. 26.—A Chicago News correspondent gets the following interview, Senator Blackburn of Kentucky, was asked yesterday what was the effect upon the people of Cleveland's trip through the south:

"I don't think that anyone in the Democratic party doubts that Mr. Cleveland will be renominated," replied the senator, rather evasively. "As to his election, there are yet twelve months before that November, and I am not a prophet."

"Do you think Carlisle is a candidate for the second place on the ticket?"

"I think he has far too much good sense to expect it. But I can tell you where the vice president will come from. He will be from Illinois."

"What will be the name?"

"I don't care to answer that question."

"Will it begin with M?" asked the reporter, venturing upon Mr. Morrison as a vague guess.

"No, it will begin with B," said Mr. Blackburn. "Further than this I do not care to say, except that he lives in Washington and occupies an official position."

"You mean Commissioner Black?" was asked.

But the senator made no answer. He simply smiled knowingly and walked away.

NO CAUSE OF ACTION.

Verdict in the California Insurance Company vs. Lambert & Bishop.

JOLIET, ILS., Nov. 25.—Gen. J. Blackburn Jones completed his argument at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon in the case of the California Insurance company against the Lambert & Bishop Wire Fence company for the recovery of insurance losses. P. C. Haley consumed an hour Thursday morning and two hours Wednesday in an analysis of the evidence in favor of defendants, in which he claimed that the evidence showed a conspiracy between Whyte and counsel to blackmail defendants, to which Gen. Jones replied that it was absurd to allege that the insurance companies, representing a capital of $300,000,000, would go into a case to help Whyte recover a $4,000 mortgage held by J. M. Bishop on Whyte's $12,000 farm. Gen. Jones made many telling points for his client. The jury retired about 3:30 o'clock after receiving the judge's instructions.

JOHN LAMBERT.

The jury returned a sealed verdict Friday morning, holding that the insurance company had no cause of action. The verdict is generally approved and Whyte will be arrested.

Several weeks ago the establishment of the Joliet Barbed Wire Fence company at Joliet was burned. The insurance companies in which the concern had been insured paid the amount of the insurance, but shortly thereafter commenced suit against Lambert & Bishop, proprietors of the establishment which had been destroyed, to recover the money paid to them, on the ground that the fire was of incendiary origin. The insurance companies posted their case principally upon the testimony of J. M. Whyte, former superintendent for Lambert & Bishop, who claimed that he had set fire to the premises, having been instigated to the deed by the defendants, who wanted the insurance money. This statement was denied in toto by Lambert and Bishop, who, besides testifying in their own defense, introduced other testimony to show that the fire did not originate as Whyte stated.

BLEW DOWN A DANCE HALL.

The Cyclone Claims Five Victims and Wounds Twenty More.

MINEOLA, TEX., Nov. 25.—Late Saturday night a heavy windstorm visited this town, blowing down a hall during the progress of a dance held by colored people. Five persons were killed and about twenty injured. About seventy persons were in the hall when it collapsed. Six of the injured have arms or legs broken. The killed are: Thomas Hardeman, Jack Wilson, Reuben Garrett, Fannie Benson, Rose Benson.

The storerooms below the dance hall were occupied by R. F. Gibson & Co., L. A. Dawson, and N. S. Sorkelson, whose aggregate loss on groceries and general merchandise exceeds $12,000.

Fined the Whole City Government.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 25.—Judge Brewer, of the United States circuit court, Wednesday imposed fines varying in amount from $50 to $600 on the mayor and every council of Lincoln for disobeying the court's injunction restraining them from deposing Police Judge Parsons, of Lincoln, charged with corruption in office.

FIRES AND OTHER ACCIDENTS.

While crossing a railroad track at Somonauk, DeKalb county, Ills., a carriage containing John Rose and his daughter was struck by an express train. The young lady was instantly killed and her father was dangerously injured.

Frank Spratt, a wealthy stockman of Farmer City, Ills., jumped from a freight train at Danville, Ills., Tuesday night, and was fatally injured.

Charles Packler and his wife and child lost their lives by the burning of the house in which they lived at Browning, Ills. The building is thought to have been fired by an incendiary.

In a collision on the Baltimore & Ohio road, about fifteen miles south of Pittsburg, three men were killed and five others seriously injured. At Anna, Ohio, an engineer and a fireman were killed in a smash up on the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton road.

L. K. Shaw, a farmer, near Romeo, Mich., was found dead in the woods four miles from his place. He had received about $600 from the sale of grain, and it is thought he had been killed for his money.

In a riot between the notorious "Owl" gang and a number of Italians at Pittsburg Thursday two men were shot and twelve or fifteen wounded, but none received fatal injuries. Pistols, knives and clubs were used by the combatants.

WHAT AM I TO DO?

unhappily but too well known. They differ in different individuals to some extent. A Bilious man is seldom a breakfast eater. Too frequently, alas, he has an excellent appetite for liquids. His tongue will hardly bear inspection at any time; if it is not white and furred, it is rough, at all events.

The digestive system is wholly out of order and Diarrhea or Consumption may be a symptom or the two may alternate. There are often Hemorrhoids or even loss of blood. There may be giddiness and often headache and acidity or flatulence and tenderness in the pit of the stomach. To correct all this if not a cure try Green's August Flower. It costs but a trifle and thousands attest its efficacy.

Many of our aesthetic contemporaries are shocked at the return of the green postage stamps, but for our part we are always glad to welcome the green-back.

GIRLS AND MOTHERS! READ THIS!

I wish to tell you of the case of a girl 16 years old, who had been sick with suppression two years. Her father had paid over $300 for doctors bills, still she was failing. She had the worst countenance that I have ever seen, a kind of greenish yellow, she was emaciated, had constant bowel trouble, and had to take morphine every night in order to sleep at all. All who saw her thought she would die. Her parents said they had done all they could; I repeatedly urged them to try Zoa-Phora, but they were strongly prejudiced against "nostrums." Finally the mother said, "We must do something, and this is as likely to help her as anything." She and I persuaded the father to let the girl try it. As a result in four months her functions were established and regular, and in six months she was the picture of health—a living wonder to all who had known her.

I could describe 20 other cases, not as wonderful as this, but still very remarkable cures.

SECOND CHRONICLES.

Chapter First. Read at the Ridgeway Library Hall Dedication by Mrs. W. R. Wilson.

And it came to pass in the year 1880, that a certain young man bade farewell to his native home and journeyed Southward until he came to a certain high place noted for its institutions of learning, where he tarried for three years, or until he had strengthened himself in knowledge and wisdom to begin the warfare of life. Now this young man had had gold and silver enough to carry him through this un- [illegible] at his trade, which was that of a carpenter, working and studying as best he could, but he was of good courage, and dreaded not; neither was he dismayed; besides being noble in stature and fair to look upon. During his tarrying there however, he was smitten with one of the fair daughters tarrying there for the self same purpose of himself, and she was the daughter of Jonathan and Lydia, who dwelt in a remote town not far dist[illegible] and they were people whose hearts [illegible] lifted up in the ways of the Lord, and they eschewed evil and loved knowledge and wisdom. Therefore they granted it unto their daughter, that she might go in and out before the sons and daughters of the adjoining towns around, teaching them also wisdom and knowledge. After this it came to pass that this certain young man journeyed to the home of Jonathan and Lydia, and took this fair daughter to wife. Then they made preparations to journey on together with their father and mother's blessing on their heads and with good advice to keep the statutes of the Lord that he might prosper them, for they had not riches, nor even a home for shelter from the inclemencies of earth. So they went about teaching and laboring with the people from place to place, meeting with prosperity and adversity until they came to a great city eastward. There they established themselves and forsook not their God and the obeying of his commandments, and God blessed and prospered them, so that they had gold and silver, houses and lands and flocks in abundance, and they begat sons, and they too sought wisdom and knowledge, as did their forefathers. Meanwhile Jonathan and Lydia dwelt on with the people in their little town, trying to hold up now and then a house of instruction and a house wherein to impart instruction to the youth in the ways in a house to worship God, for there were [illegible] living people and zealots of good works and in so doing the people had to be taxed for they had no gold and silver in the treasury. Now it came to pass while amid other struggling to build up their little town somewhat, that one of the young men Peter and Phebe, which made the hearts of all the people rejoice and be glad with exceeding great joy, and they all where they had left in their hearts to try to build up their little town, was but a spark compared to a great conflagration then. And their hearts began to wax warm and kindle to the importance of greater knowledge and wisdom, for he proclaimed [illegible] throughout in such a way that it should be an important factor with their houses of worship and instruction, and said to the young and old, particularly to the young and rising generation in their hearts and strivings after knowledge [illegible] I will build you a temple that [illegible] may possess it, and have it as a memorial for all interitance to you and your children after you forever, and all the people said Amen, Amen. Now this was the [illegible] of this son of Peter and Phebe for he had pondered it in his heart for large years, waiting for the proper time. [illegible] strength. Then [illegible] themselves [illegible] one side, and took counsel [illegible] the other after this manner: We [illegible] desire of [illegible] [illegible] Peter and Phebe, which made the hearts of all the people rejoice and be glad with exceeding great joy, and [illegible] hearts to try to build up their little town, was but a spark compared to a great conflagration then. And their hearts began to wax warm and kindle to the importance of greater knowledge and wisdom, for he proclaimed [illegible] throughout in such a way that it should be an important factor with their houses of worship and instruction, and said to the young and old, particularly to the young and rising generation in their hearts and strivings after knowledge [illegible] I will build you a temple that [illegible] may possess it, and have it as a memorial for an inheritance to you and your children after you forever, and all the people said Amen, Amen. Now this was the [illegible] of this son of Peter and Phebe for he had pondered it in his heart for large years, waiting for the proper time. [illegible] strength. Then [illegible] themselves [illegible] one side, and took counsel [illegible] the other after this manner: We [illegible] desire of [illegible] [illegible] over them and the younger sons of Joseph and Mary for [illegible] and the son of Sarah and Martha [illegible] gold and the silver [illegible] ing of the temple, and [illegible] their number that were [illegible] and were [illegible] to counsel with and to carry out the desire of the son of Peter and Phebe. After this, at the appointed time, they commenced again to labor, and such was the morning and evening [illegible] ful workmen enough, and masons and bricklayers in our town ready to do the work of the temple besides timber of various kinds in abundance and they began the building of the temple in the 7th Mo. in year of our Lord 1887, and completed it in the self same year. The length of it was 40 feet and the breadth 20, and the [illegible] thereof was 28 feet. Then this certain young man who bade farewell to his native home two score years and eight before, the son of Peter and Phebe, pronounced it finished and said Well done good and faithful [illegible] rewards. Then this noble son out of his good heart, took of his gold and his silver, for he had now become one of the Millionaires of that great eastern city, and furnished it throughout and placed within it the books of the law and the covenant, and very many others too numerous to mention, to prepare their hearts to keep the commandments and the statutes and testimonies of the Lord and to be united together as one in heart in caring for and sustaining the interests of the people. Then the Son of Peter and Phebe [illegible] unto the people [illegible] the victory.

Lesson for December 4.

PARABLES OF THE SOWER. MATT. XIII, 1-9.

Notes. This was the first of the series of eight parables delivered on the shore of the Sea of Galilee, near Capernaum. It was also the beginning of Christ's teaching by parables. "On that day." The same in which Jesus was teaching in a house, and his mother and brethren [illegible] to him see Mark [illegible] "At the seaside." In full view of the multitude and the disciples "waxing great." "Much glory of room." "He had entered into a boat." It was a common fishing craft, and may have belonged to one of his disciples. On the shelvy shore of the lake there were many nooks where a boat could rest in safety and where a crowd could gather on the sides, could listen without hearing strange. "To furnish seats, the stones are filled up with smooth masses of basalt." "Many things in parables." Seven parables are mentioned in this chapter, and but one other one only in Mark. A parable is a method of unfolding the truth, peculiar to the Eastern mind. It is a fictitious story, true to nature, yet not exaggerated to deceiving. It veils the spiritual truth under a symbol to convey it to the unwilling heart. "A sower went forth." Out of his hamlet protected against robbers, into the open country, where there are no fences, where thorns are about but in clumps, and where rocks and fertile patches are side by side. "By the wayside." Naturally as the seed was scattered by hand some of it would fall upon the pathway. Perhaps before Jesus eyes was just such a one running thro' the field of corn. "Our horses are actually trampling down some seeds which have taken by the wayside, and birds and sparrows are busy picking them up." "Land of Book." "Rock places." On the thin layer of soil covering the underlying rock bed, the sun warming the rock finds the seed lying only a few inches down so—it shall spring up. "Upon the thorns." In good but preoccupied soil. For thorns are invisible at time of sowing, but the roots are there ready to choke out any rivals. "Some a hundred fold." This return is extraordinary though not the rule in the East. Herodotus mentions that two hundred fold and sometimes three were a common returns. Another mentions a species of maize that yields four hundred fold. Morrison notices that in Kent, "Barley, in 1795, in my single seeds yield from 200 to 1000 grains."

(Application.) It is striking that in a sermon made of Christ's sayings and teachings were uttered in the open air. Its true he expounded in the Synagogue, but it was his principle that wherever he could get the people together he taught them. All places are sacred to the Lord, and it so happens that whether in the grove or on the sea shore, in the valley or on the mountain top, the earnest hearer and worker his mission can say I right word in the right place. Never be ashamed to preach Christ anywhere. Add to one's enthusiastic self-forgetful consecration an insight into human nature and a knowledge of its ways and it may be a most [illegible]

Many [illegible] from angels' methods [illegible] Take is not [illegible] lessons from the first and simple one. [illegible] nature will often open the good where the learned pattern [illegible] to enter the never story may [illegible]

Verse first. "A sower went forth to sow." He went to the soil. [illegible] [illegible] "The wise Christ was [illegible] [illegible] fruit will [illegible] quicker by going to men than by waiting for them to come to you.

The sower carried a bag full of seed that would spring even on rocks. Look first to the seed.

Christ distinguishes three classes of unfruitful hearers. First those who are invisible as the wayside pebbles from the church. Second those who heed but have no stability, who are almost immediately blasted by the heat of temptation. Third, those who promise fair to God, who make fine receipts, but who lack the moral back bone to carry them out.

Some are like birds who peck at the truth and destroy it. Others are as [illegible] and rocks who [illegible] ment to the soul. And there are those like thorns, who, when they see others striving for goodliness and virtue, ensnare them with deceitful pleasure [illegible] worldly things.

Let the weak, struggling Christian keep carefully away from these.

All, though the seed may find safe lodgements, do not yield a hundred-fold. The case is rare. Don't be envious or discouraged. Yield all the fruit you can.

There is a comfort that, if we sow good seed there will be some harvest and it is likely to be greater than the seed sown.

The seed is the Word of God.

Our wisdom friend, Daniel E. Soper, the present postmaster of Newaygo, Mich., is still climbing up the ladder of fame. He has recently been elected School Trustee, and we clip the following account of a visit from him to the Newaygo schools from the Tribune of that city.

On Saturday afternoon, in company with Trustee Soper, a representative of the Tribune visited the Union School and listened to an hour's literary and musical exercises. Newaygo has good reason for congratulation over the condition and prospects of her schools and too much credit can not be given to the teachers in charge, all of whom seem fully imbued with love for their important work.

We cannot give the program of exercises on the afternoon in question, but the recitations and essays were of a high order and demonstrate that there is an abundance of talent in the Newaygo boys and girls—young and old.

The crowning act was however performed by our friend Soper, who on being called on for a speech recited one of Will Carleton's poems in a manner which "brought down the house." He was "encored back onto the stage where he proved himself at home by reciting the tragic history of a pin, a boy and a man who some way got mixed up through the efforts of the boy.

We urge the patrons and friends of the school to visit it and thus encourage teachers and pupils who are doing good work and deserve such encouragement.

THE MICHIGAN B. M. A.

The Origin and Growth of a Grand Idea

Seven hundred years ago the merchants in the larger cities of China formed themselves into guilds for the protection of themselves against excessive competition and the other evils incident to commercial pursuits. Their rules were stringent and rigidly enforced, and their penalties for violations excessively severe. A standard of weights and measures, for instance, was estabished by all the guilds, and any member using scales or measures, not up to the standard was heavily fined. A second offense subjected the offender to expulsion, after which no member of any guild could do any business, or hold any intercourse with him. Such a punishment amounted to his enforced retirement from trade, as the commercial system of China was so complicated that one merchant was largely dependent upon another and could not exist as a merchant, when intercommunication was cut off. While many of the regulations of the Chinese guilds seem ridiculous and antiquated in this age of the world, it requires little research to satisfy the reader that the mercantile guilds of China played an important part in the development of that empire and that their influence for good can never be computed.

With the rise of the mercantile guilds of Europe in the thirteenth century, and the influence they exerted in counterbalancing the power of the nobles, Americans are more familiar. Their history is a part of the history of Europe, and any historian who neglected to pay tribute to the power of the guilds would not be considered worthy the name. Their influence, both politically and commercially, and their enormous revenues, which were devoted to charities, Governmental protection and municipal improvement, have given the word guild an honorable significance, which inspires the respect of every merchant in the world.

The first successful attempt to naturalize the guild in this country was in 1879, when the grocers of Boston organized an association for the purpose of eradicating abuses equally as obnoxious as those existing in the time of Ming and Ting. The organization proved unusually successful, and was soon reinforced by other organizations in the New England States. The Empire State followed in the wake of the Yankees, when the "movement," as it then became known, was transplanted to Michigan, where it found fertile soil and congenial surroundings, and has attained a growth and influence far in advance of any other locality in the New World. The first Association formed in this State was at Traverse City, where the idea has blossomed to the fullest fragrance. In the three years the Traverse City Business Men's Association has been in existence, it has accomplished a great work for the place of its birth, and the whole Grand Traverse region as well. In the line of protection, thousands of dollars' worth of bad accounts have been collected, the making of thousands of dollars of poor accounts prevented, and reductions in freight and express rates have been secured. In the line of public improvements—in which work the Michigan associations are especially active—the Association has secured three new manufacturing industries, employing an aggregate of about 150 persons. It required much effort and the raising of considerabfe sums of money to secure these results, but the members realized that they were banded together for that purpose, remembering that every addition to the manufacturing industries of every place means more business for the merchant, better markets for the farmer, more work for the mechanic—in short, an improvement all around. It is because of this public spiritedness that the associations of the Wolverine State have achieved such success. The members have not confined their operations wholly to their own advancement, but have worked equally as hard for the welfare of the farmer and mechanic, thus winning the respect and friendship of all who approve of correct business methods.

The second organization formed in this State was a Retail Grocers' Association of this city, with whose career the readers of the Eagle are quite familiar. Having secured the membership of nearly every grocer in the city and having had frequent importunities to admit business men in every branch of trade, the Association has finally decided to open its doors to reputable business men in any line and has accordingly changed its name to the more comprehensive title of the Grand Rapids Mercantile Association.

Since the Grand Rapids Association was organized, 103 other general and special associations have been formed in various parts of the State, all of which are doing good work in the protection of business men, the elevation of business methods, and the advancement of the moral and material interests of the community. Most of the work of organization has fallen on the shoulders of E. A. Stowe, editor of the Michigan Tradesman, who has been a persistent advocate of the idea, personally, and through the medium of his paper, for the past five years. Of the 103 associations now in existence in this State, he was present at the birth of eighty, and company with Evans Hamilton, of Traverse City, who has also borne a prominent part in the work, he has assisted in forming a half dozen more.

As the associations increased, the necessity for uniformity and co-operation became more apparent. It was found that many subjects, notably those of legislation, insurance and transportation could be handled by a central body more effectually than by a great number of isolated organizations. After several months' agitation, the idea took shape in the form of a call for a meeting of representatives of all the associations to consider the project of forming a State organization. The meeting was held in this city on September 21, 1886, and before the sessions closed, the Michigan Business Men's Association had been formally ushered into existence. This body although but a little over a year old, has more than fulfilled the expectations of its founders, having proved to be a wonderful stimulus to local organizations and brought about a degree of uniformity in methods and working plans which could have been effected in no other way. Besides putting the local associations into direct communication with each other, the State body has made its influence felt in other directions—especially in legislative work, as is evidenced by the passage of two bills in the interest of business men at the last session of the Legislature. The second annual convention was held at Flint, in September, when the Association was merged into a corporate body, with power to enforce its rules and charter auxillaries. The latter prerogative has been productive of much good, as it puts every local body on the same basis, giving the work a degree of effectiveness not possessed under the old plan in operation

What will the ultimate result of a movement begun so auspiciously and carried on so successfully, the Eagle does not pretend to predict. It does not require any stretch of the imagination to affirm that before two years have elapsed there will be an auxiliary association in every city and town in the State. Rightly used, the power thus acquired will be productive of great good to every man in the State. Wrongly used, it is not difficult to foresee that the whole fabric will meet with disaster. As an army is judged by its Generals, a movement is judged by its leaders. The Eagle's acquaintance with the leaders of this movement gives good grounds for the opinion that it is in safe hands—that the great number of men who have espoused the work in different parts of the State or given it the seal of their approval, will never allow the influence acquired to be used for other purposes than those set forth in the declaration of principles—the protection and elevation of business men and the consequent prosperity of the community.—Grand Rapids Eagle.

Advice to Girls.

Do you ever think what your influence may do to prevent young men from becoming drunkards? You may not realize it but it depends very much on what you say and do, whether the first step in the downward career is taken or not. A light and trifling way of speaking concerning the subject, a New Year's invitation to take a glass of wine, or the sipping a little yourself, may give the impetus to many a half formed desire. Guard your words and actions, let your voices ever be heard in earnest disapproval of the dreadful habit. Let it not be said that it was from your white hand that the loathsome drunkard received his first glass. Never encourage the attentions of a young man who is addicted to the use of intoxicating liquor. No matter how wealthy, or how well educated he may be, he can never make you happy, while he clings to the habit. Never delude yourself with the idea that you can reform him after marriage. If he will not yield to your persuasion before he has secured your hand, he certainly will not after. Therefore it rests with you, whether your life shall be made happy or miserable.

A letter bearing the address, "L. C. Blood, Tecumseh," was received by L. C. Blood, the grocer, Monday, and it will be most carefully preserved. It was written by a brother, Wm. A. Blood, and posted at Mt. Morris, N. Y., on January 10, 1862. Shortly after that date the writer enlisted in the union army, was taken prisoner and sent to Andersonville, where he shared the fate of thousands of other federal soldiers who were cast into that infamous pen. The letter has been on the road these twenty years, and presuming from numerous postmarks it has traveled extensively. The state not being written on the envelope, it is probable that the letter has passed through the office of every Tecumseh in the union. Mr. Blood formerly lived at Tecumseh, Mich., and as the most recent postmark was made at that point, it is evident that office was the last one visited previous to reaching its destination. It is a memento that will be greatly cherished.—Lansing Republican.

THE FUTURE MAN.

Bill Nye Discusses Him from a Scientific Standpoint.

WITHOUT wishing to alarm the American people with a panic, I desire briefly and seriously to discuss the great question, "Whither are we tending?" This question is to be the condition of the coming man. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that mankind is passing through a great deal of change, even since we were children, if not until as she was a few brief years ago. And is it not true, fellow citizens, that we pause to consider what is to be the future of the American?

We do not. It has been the subject of change both of the nature of material and preparation. The effect affect the weather in such a way as to upset day-long [illegible] changes. Take, for instance, the oyster. Of our comparatively [illegible] and [illegible] Before [illegible] dim [illegible] At one time the oyster [illegible] back yard and we had to wait till we found him. Now we take a load of oysters off the train, all run down, and feed them artificially till they swell up to a fancy size and bring a fancy price. Now, where will all this lead at last? I ask as a careful scientist. Instead of eating apples, as Adam did, we work the fruit up into applejack and pie, while even the simple oyster is perverted, and instead of allowing him to fatten up in the fall on acorns and ancient mariners, flesh is artificially put on his bones by the artificial osmose and dialysis of our advanced civilization. How can you make an oyster stout or train him down by making him jerk a health lift so many hours every day, or cultivate his body at the expense of his mind, without ultimately not only impairing the future usefulness of the oyster himself, but at the same time affecting the future of the human race?

I only use the oyster as an illustration, and I do not wish to cause alarm, but I say that if we stimulate the oyster artificially and swell him up by scientific means we not only do so at the expense of his better nature and keep him away from his family, but we are making our mark on the future race of men. Oyster fattening is now, of course, in its infancy. Only a few years ago an effort was made to fatten cove oysters at St. Louis while in the can, but the system was not well understood and those who had it in charge only succeeded in making the can itself more plump. But now oysters are kept on ground feed and given nothing to do for a few weeks, and even the older and overworked sway-backed and rickety oysters of the dim and murky past are made to fill out and many of them have to put a gore in the waistband of their shells. I only speak of the oyster incidentally as one of the objects towards which science has turned its attention and I assert with the utmost confidence that the time will come, unless science should get a set back, when the present hurrying race oyster will give place to the open face oyster, grafted on the octopus and big enough to feed a hotel. Further than that, the oyster of the future will carry in a hip pocket a flask of [illegible] and two little distinct [illegible] one of which will contain salt and the other pepper, and there will be some way [illegible] so that you can tell which is which. But [illegible] the oyster question? That is a question we does not discuss. It is a [illegible] which we are putting on [illegible] And what will be the result to the home life of the oyster? We take him from all home influences which surround human [illegible] and we improve his [illegible] and what is to be the result? [illegible]

[illegible] I ask that I may [illegible] answer. [illegible] in [illegible] to be [illegible] and I [illegible]

[illegible] affect the [illegible] changes [illegible] relaxation [illegible] of that kind.

Again the smoking [illegible] a fallacy and [illegible] and [illegible] and always with the same [illegible] power on the [illegible] it finally [illegible] stands a silent drawing [illegible] country, but [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] of the cup. [illegible] the mental strain as that [illegible] the thinker finally finds at last the [illegible] and forgets for some hours or days [illegible] and the great mental strain [illegible] to the work of punching [illegible] when it rains is more than it is equal to.

Football produces what may be called the endogen as [illegible] broken bones, [illegible] and trauma. Copenhagen produces melancholy, and the gamest boat [illegible] Horse racing [illegible] and [illegible] for preparation and [illegible] for a quiet person to [illegible] The pitcher [illegible] a new disease, the outgrowth of the game, the lawn tennis elbow is another result of a popular open air game, and it begins to look as though the coming American would hear with one overgrown telephonic ear, while the other will be rudimentary only. He will have an abnormal baseball arm with a lawn tennis elbow, a powerful football kicking leg with the superior foot driven back into the palm of his foot. He will have a highly trained biceps muscle over his eye to retain his glass, and that eye will be trained to shoot a curved glance over a high hat and witness anything on the stage.—Bill Nye in New York World.

With our digits growing numb
To the core,
We believe that winter is come
As of yore;
And we delicately toy
With a jokelet, sweet and coy,
As we hear the office boy
"Close dat door!"

STORIES ABOUT MEN.

An American Girl Declines to Dance with His Royal Highness.

The only snub the prince of Wales ever received at Homburg was administered by an take the breath away from her mother. It was the season the prince fell on the salon floor with Miss Winslow while waltzing. He had overcharged himself with wine while at dinner. Presently he caught sight of this [illegible] handsome and passionate fond of dancing, who had some days previous been introduced to him. He dispatched an aide-de-camp to solicit her for a waltz. On the instant and while her mother was [illegible] the wage of a suitable lover, she said: "Convey my regrets to his royal highness and inform him that I shall dance no more this season."

"But you forget, Miss Winslow," [illegible] the emissary, "that this is a royal command."

"And you forget, sir, that I am an American and am not accustomed to obeying royal commands."

At this the waltzers vanished, and the young lady's mother recovered her breath. The prince by [illegible] her word by abstaining from dancing the remainder of the season.—Chicago News.

Webster as a Sportsman.

The Boston Commonwealth relates what it says is a hitherto unpublished story of Daniel Webster. One autumn during the prevalence of a strong northeasterly storm, Mr. Webster, in company with some dozen other sportsmen, went to Brant Rock to shoot ducks. The birds were flying in considerable numbers, but only a few passed over the rock, and consequently the prospect for fat bags was rather slim. However, the tide of Mr. Webster's luck was turned before the day was over in the following manner: Two adventurous sportsmen were cruising in a small boat off the rock, popping away at the birds in a lively fashion that filled the sportsmen on the rock with envy. Suddenly a flock of about thirty brant hove in sight near the boat, and when within range the floating gunners banged away into the midst of them, dropping several. The birds, confused by the discharge of firearms and the loss of some of their number, wheeled and made directly for the rock. As they passed over every gun was, of course, discharged, and all but two or three of the flock fell upon the rock. A question that at once presented itself, of course, was, "Who killed the birds?" Each one of the twenty-four sportsmen was sure that at least two or three birds had fallen before his gun, and as there were only some two dozen birds in all killed, it did not look as if a division of the spoil could be readily accomplished. Mr. Webster, however, was equal to the occasion. Assuming a mock judicial air, he addressed the group of excited gunners: "My friends," said he, "this case is one of adjudication. I'll buy the birds and you can divide the money." And this ruling of the "court" was accepted.

Stories of Beau Brummell.

Beau Brummell, the glass of fashion in his day, died in poverty at Caen. Many droll stories are told of him. He was once met limping on Bond street. On being asked what was the matter, he replied that he had caught a cold in his favorite leg, adding: "I left my carriage yesterday evening on my way to town from the pavilion, and the infernal of a hackney had the impudence to run with a lamp straight."

Meeting Lady —— at Ascot, he entered into conversation with her, in which she expressed surprise that he should waste his time in such a manner, whereupon he [illegible] and begged him to think of the task he [illegible] "My dear lady," he replied, "you don't imagine I have [illegible]"

"The service! What [illegible] the bell?" Brummell [illegible] "It is quite true that [illegible] on meeting his royal highness, who was determined to give him the cut, Brummell turned to the friend he was walking with, whom the prince did not [illegible] and loudly asked, "Who is that fellow?"

"[illegible] Brummell instantly, "only when I was standing at the window of White's and saw you passed—Ah, how do you do, Jemmy?"

Spicy Correspondence of Statesmen.

The authors [illegible] members of the early [illegible] legislature were [illegible] characteristic of the times. A great deal of the business which was then felt between the friends of the great San Francisco vigilance committee and the members of the law and order party was constantly creeping up. Many anti-vigilance bills were introduced and one in particular by Harvey Lee proved much discussion, although it was filled with absurd and unconstitutional provisions. Lee, being of an ardent temperament, spoke long and warmly for his bill. A crushing reply was made by Caleb Burbank, who was a man of large physique as well as strong intellect and afraid of nothing. He had scarcely taken his seat when a page handed him a note, which read as follows:

"Burbank:

"Sir: If you ever [illegible] that manner again I shall [illegible] to visit your desk with a [illegible]

Long Sermons.

Mr. Spurgeon, in the annual meeting of his evangelists, thus speaks of the longwinded sermons of certain preachers: "There are some preachers who ought to have two pounds of Champion & Hall's gunpowder sewed in their trousers to go off when they get to secondly," and there were some brethren whom he was afraid to ask to preach, because he never knew whether they would leave off in this world or the next.

The Attack to Be Renewed.

A citizen of Dallas, Tex., has invented an electric fishing line which kills a fish the instant it [illegible] rings a bell on shore to warn the fisherman who may be under a tree some yards distant playing seven ups with a lost fur angler to decide which shall pay for the bait. An attachment that would clean and fry the fish before they are hauled out of the water would prove a great boon to the fisherman and make the inventor's fortune.—Norristown Herald.

The New York Commercial Advertiser says a Buffalo man "dreamed that he had been elected alderman, got up in his sleep, dressed and went to a restaurant where he treated his dream world supporters to $30 worth of drinks before he woke up." He dreamed, of course, that he had been elected Buffalo alderman. Know Thyself, Likewise Thy Hoss.

Farmer Thistlepod sat in the operating chair in the office of the phrenologist. "Your tastes are the tastes of a farmer," said the phrenologist, "and I assume, and in fact am confident, that you are a farmer. You are unready and faltering in speech; you find it difficult to express your ideas. You are sadly deficient in judgment—have no knowledge whatever of human nature; your innocent, confiding disposition renders you an easy prey to designing men, and your own perfect honesty prevents you from suspecting or defrauding any one." Three weeks later the phrenologist bought a nice, quiet, safe, gentle family horse of Farmer Thistlepod. And the farmer sold him a knock kneed old bronco, 22 years old, with a ewe neck, a hot tail and a temper so vicious that the wildest Indian feared it—a horse that had been sold for $27 at two bazars in three weeks—for $375. "It's jest wonderful," said Farmer Thistlepod, as he watched the new horse running away with its new owner, "it's jest wonderful that a man sh'd know so etarnally much about men and not know a thing about hosses."—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

Another Jail Mystery.

Chicago Jailer—What's that?

Prisoner—A barrel of gunpowder.

"My, my! And what's that?"

"Mercy on us! What have you in that box?"

"A grand piano."

"They blew in."

"Oh, of course! Wonder I did not think of that before. 'Gitard, close the shutters, please.'"—Omaha World.

"And why are you so surprised, Mr. Sampson," she said, drawing herself up with haughtiness, "that I play the piano so well?"

"Because your hands are so small, Miss Smith, that you must find it difficult to strike an octave."

Then she played some more for him.—Tid-Bits.

An Eye to Business.

"What's the matter?" asked a gentleman, approaching a crowd on the street.

A small Hartford child, just home from Sunday school, informed his father that he could name the first five books of the New Testament. "Oh, I feel so bad," said a Hartford 6-year-old. "I guess it must be my conscience."

"Why, my dear," queried his mother, "you haven't been telling any wrong stories, have you?"

"Oh, dear, no. But I did eat too much dinner and my conscience aches right here," pressing hard on the most painful spot childhood carries.—Hartford Post.

A Boston mother was putting her little one to bed, and said:

Among them was a colored man in tonsorial tights, who was perched on a platform without any apparent occupation. He was a [illegible] about [illegible] [illegible] Borneo, the great cannibal island, and [illegible] great names in history without [illegible] the gate keeper for information. [illegible] loudly was a sign warning a dozen [illegible] three sizes too [illegible] like a house with a center ground [illegible]

"Surprisin' wonder," he said in response to the reporter's query about the colored [illegible] city within. "Dunno sir, I'm Kerosene Jake, though just now he's only just hoing the head act."

"What is that?"

"Standing on his head when the audience requests."

"Why do you call him Kerosene Jake?"

"Well, you see it's this way," said the giant, vaulting lightly, expelling sufficient tobacco juice to keep his mouth in conversational trim. "He's the champion kerosene drinker of America—thinks nothing of drinking four pints a day—and takes to it," added the gateman reflectively, "just like it was beer. Well, sir, he kept to work drinkin' way into Jooly till we hit that hot spell. The thermometer upstairs climb up to 109, and all the time Jake was a drinkin' cheap grade oil 150 fire test. You see that's only allowin' him 41 degs. margin before explosion. So me and the manager consulted and put Jake on the head act until winter. You can see for yourself, young feller, we couldn't afford to run no risks, and have Kerosene Jake bust in the dull season."—New York Tribune.

A Beard Raiser from Wayback.

A Boston man has a twin brother living in the west who looks very much like him. The other morning the Boston twin, after being shaved, went home and found there his brother, who had just come east. The western twin needed shaving badly, and was directed to the barber shop. He entered and seated himself, but the barber paid no attention to him. "What's the matter with you" said the western twin after waiting long enough. "Why don't you shave me?" "Why, I've just shaved you," said the barber. "Much you did," said the twin. "Look at my face." The barber looked at a big, black beard of a week's growth, felt of it to assure himself that his eye was not deceiving him, and burst out: "If you can raise a beard like that in twenty minutes you'd better go into the mattress business."—Chicago News.

Two Points of View.

First Wood Sawyer—This 'ere is a hard, hard world, no chance for enjoyment at all. How I'd like to knock off and go duck hunting like I did when I was a boy.

Second Wood Sawyer—You must be crazy.

"Crazy, because I want to go duck hunting?"

"Clean daft. In Maryland, where I just came from, duck hunting is a regular trade, and men are paid so much a head for all they kill. I've been a duck hunter for six years."

"What a country! Are we lookin' out here?"

"I'd like here to stay wood for a rest."—Omaha World.

Great Magnetic Power.

A Duluth newspaper letting of the power of the magnetic iron ore of that vicinity, says that the miners have to wear moccasins because the ore draws all the tacks from their boots, that houses near the mines have to be built with wooden pins or bolts, because the iron draws the nails, that a wild duck that had mistaken its way and flown a few hundred yards was stopped in its flight over the mines, drawn earthward and made a prisoner, and that people who live much from in the blood are so magnetic that they sleep in a trance.

Effect of the Climate.

"Who is the gentleman who registers 'Marquis Dumade de Walsingham?' 'That?' said the clerk, looking over the register, 'oh, that is Dr. Wilson, of Ohio. He has been at Lake three months and just got home last night.' 'And who is this then, just below him, who writes 'Lucretia Rabbel Wilson?' 'That is the sister-in-law of the president of the republic of Lake S.'"—Burlette in Brooklyn Eagle.

A Question of Discretion.

"I see that Gen. [illegible] is awful to making hash in the penitentiary."

"Yes, I see."

"Does it seem to you a mistake to let the Attorney-General take the secret of making any more of those dangerous compounds?"—Chicago News.

"[illegible]

"You [illegible] repeated.

"Fact is, gov'nor, dat dog's a wolf."

"Why don't you kill it" and get the bounty?"

"Sh! I'm onto this bounty all right! Hain't heard any talk 'bout the bounty bein' repealed by the next legislature, I reckon?"

"No."

"Glad o' that, I don't want to get stuck again. I got two more wolves out'n the barn, an' I'm goin' to raise 'em. I low in a year or so to have a pretty respectable flock to turn in to the territorial treasurer."

"It ought to pay."

"'Twill, if I don't get stuck like I did in northern Wisconsin once."

"How was that?"

"B'ar—started a b'ar farm. The state was payin' $10 apiece for b'ar scalps an' mighty tickled to get 'em at that. I got a pair of black b'ar an' took good care of 'em, an' in a few years I had a likely herd of seventeen as pretty b'ar as you ever seen. 'Lowed to kill 'bout ten of 'em in the spring an' send the scalps to the state treasurer, tellin' him how I went out in the woods an' fit 'em with an ax an' got most chawed up, but it didn't work—I got floored."

"How did that happen?"

"Legislature went an' repealed the law, an' there I was, left with seventeen big, hungry b'ar on my hands, an' the bottom gone out o' the b'ar market more'n a mile straight down! Seventeen b'ar, an' no demand for b'ar! Seventeen b'ar, an' b'ar a drug in the market! Back yard so full of chained up b'ar that you couldn't walk, an' the price o' b'ar goin' down so you could hear it hum! It made me sick! I drove my whole flock down ten miles, where Abe Dunn lived—who was in the legislature an' voted agin b'ar—an' left 'em near his hog pen, an' then I pulled up an' come out here where I heard they was payin' $5 for wolf scalps. I tell you what, if this miserable, low lived legislature goes an' busts up the wolf industry I'll be snaked if I'll ever try to earn an honest livin' again!"—Chicago Tribune.

Fragrant.

Woman is just too awful lovely in newly laundered wamsutta and lawn when fresh from close communion with toilet soap and a crystal, watery bath. She has the ripe peach fragrance of Paradise and the breath of the cape jasmine of the tropical empyrean. OBITUARY.

Mr. Henry McCowen died at his home in Moscow, Mich., on the 7th of November, 1887. He formerly resided in Tecumseh and moved from here to Moscow in 1851, and has for many years been a prominent citizen of that place.

He has held many offices of honor and trust, and in 1878 he was nominated by the Republicans to represent his district in the State Legislature.

His oldest son was killed in the war near Petersburg, Va. He was about seventy years old at the time of his death. The last surviving member of the family is Wm. McCowen of this village.

The members of the Royal Arcanum are requested to be present at the meeting, Dec. 6th, as new officers are to be elected at that time.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., DEC. 1, 1887.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Christmas is coming.

Beautiful winter weather this week.

Walter Fowler, of Ann Arbor, was in town last Thursday.

Read the prospectus of the N. Y. Independent in another column.

Miss Jennie Sager, of Adrian, spent Thanksgiving with Tecumseh friends.

Rev. E. W. Borden, who is now preaching at Sylvania, was in Tecumseh last Monday and gave the HERALD a call. His family still resides near Britton.

There will be a delegation for the benefit of the Rev. A. W. Stalker, at the residence of Lester Collier, on Wednesday, Dec. 7, 1887. All are cordially invited.

Dr. Stewarts Prairie Side Celery is better than ever this fall. We sampled some on Thanksgiving day, which arrived just in time for dinner and pronounced it prime.

We send out a number of sample copies this week, and invite all who receive a copy to subscribe. Hand in your names now, and you will receive the December numbers free.

The City band will give a Concert at Clinton on Wednesday evening of next week, Dec. 7th. Our Clinton friends can rely on a musical treat, and they will get the full worth of their money.

Mrs. Yawger received a big turkey for Thanksgiving from her brother, which came all the way from New York, and arrived in its destination just in time. The gift was duly appreciated.

C. M. Minor & wife have gone up to Capt. Cases, in Cambridge to stay a few weeks with Mrs. Case, who is a sister of Mr. Minors. Mrs. Case feels the loss of her husband very deeply, and her brother's presence will be most acceptable to her in her present affliction.

Landlord Patterson surpassed himself in the Thanksgiving dinner served at the Lilley House. The menu would do credit to a first class hotel in a large town, and the service was equally unexceptionable. The large attendance of guests showed that they expected an extra dinner and they were not disappointed.

The casing at the gas well was all taken out by Sunday afternoon and running was begun next day. About 1,100 feet of casing was removed. The hole is down 1560 feet. The contractor does not expect to have farther trouble with water, and when it is now shut off, drilling will proceed very rapidly. The soft or shale rock has been reached underneath which lies the Trenton rock.—Blissfield Advance.

Ex-Governor John P. St. John, of Olathe, Kansas, will lecture at the Opera House, at Tecumseh, on Thursday evening, Dec. 8th. He comes under the auspices of Tecumseh W. C. T. U., and we cordially invite everybody to come and hear him. The lecture will be free, with a collection taken at the close of the meeting. Meeting will begin promptly at seven. Also, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, of Jackson, Mich., President of the State W. C. T. U., will lecture at the same place, Tuesday evening, Dec. 6th, under the auspices of the County W. C. T. U. This lecture also free with a collection. Come out and let us have a grand temperance rally.

Thanksgiving Day was a splendid day for staying in doors. Notwithstanding the drizzle and mud that evening, however, the attraction at the Opera House was sufficient to draw a good crowd to participate in the band benefit. The musical program presented was better than usual, the band giving some of their new music with excellent effect. The solo by Miss Carrie Powers, was greeted with a hearty encore which was modestly acknowledged by an appearance before the curtain. At the close of the program, the dancers appeared and tripped to the merry music of the orchestra till the morning hours arrived. It was a very pleasant affair and the band replenished their treasury by a goodly sum.

We again invite all the members of the W. C. T. U. to be present if possible at our meeting, Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at the M. E. church, to help arrange for entertaining delegates to the County Convention, to be held at this place, Dec. 6th and 7th. We invite all persons, men as well as women, to attend any of the sessions of the County Convention, of the W. C. T. U. First meeting begins promptly at 2 o'clock p. m., Tuesday, Dec. 6th. Address of welcome, response etc., will be given at that meeting. Reports of work in the local unions and election of officers will be Wednesday forenoon, and reports of Superintendents, a paper on Kindergarten work and a mother's meeting conducted by Dr. Julia P. Green, of Adrian, will occupy Wednesday afternoon. The subject of local option will also be discussed the same afternoon.

Will Baker, of Detroit was home last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Clark, of Clinton, attended the band benefit last Thursday.

Geo. Hesson has a new ad in this week's HERALD. Read his reduction in prices.

Mrs. Chas. Norris and daughter, of Marshall, are visiting friends in the village.

Mrs. H. B. Annis, mother of Mrs. Will A. Smith, died at Jackson, early Thursday morning.

Mrs. Geo. Spafford was called to Lansing to-day by telegram, announcing the serious illness of her daughter, Mrs. Will. C. Blood.

Read every card on our supplement sheet. Bargains are stated on every page. Read and be wise.

Would that "the winter of our discontent might be made glorious" by a few loads of good hickory wood.

All indebted to us will confer a favor to call and settle and greatly oblige.

W. & S. W. ANDERSON & Co

Miss Hetie Waldron, who has been visiting friends in New York for several weeks, has returned home.

Jim Hough, who has been at Minneapolis for several months, is back in Tecumseh and will remain until after the holidays.

Uncle Geo. Sheeler, of Cambridge, was in town Saturday, and we had the pleasure of shaking his hand in the HERALD sanctum.

Robert Wooden, of Cambridge, stopped in Tecumseh yesterday, on his way home from a five week's visit with friends at Rochester, N. Y.

Miss Mollie Weisinger attended the Thanksgiving party last Thursday. She has been visiting in Kansas for the past several months.

The Athletic Club held a meeting last Monday evening. This Club should not be permitted to languish. Hang to it, young men.

Every man interested in business pursuits of any kind should read the article on the supplement sheet upon the Business Men's Association.

The many Tecumseh friends of Mate Neeley, of Brooklyn, will be pleased to learn of her marriage to Mr. David Boyer, of that village, last Wednesday evening.

We greet our readers this week with our usual holiday supplement. It will be run four weeks in December, closing with the issue of Dec. 22d.

Fred Rosecrans will experience more enjoyment during the holidays than usual, this year. His wife presented him with a fine girl baby last Friday.

Boys; Read the ordinance in another column about riding upon cars and engines through the corporation. The Council intend to abate this nuisance by vigorous measures, if necessary.

Dr. Hause and his Florida party started for the Land of Flowers last Tuesday. A threatened raise in the price of tickets December 1st, hurried them off the early part of this week.

Our supplement sheet will be enlarged next week, as we were compelled to stop our canvass before getting around, in order to complete the work of the present sheet in season to go to press.

The Donation Party Tuesday evening for the benefit of Rev. F. Adkins, resulted in a handsome sum for his benefit. A good supper was served and a pleasant evening passed by those who attended.

A. T. Widner and H. M. Lawson were in town Tuesday, organizing a Collecting Association for Business men. Their head quarters and address, GRANT ROGERS, Room 4 Footer Block, Adrian, Mich. They will be in town again the last of the week.

Fred Herning has quit handling the meat axe in the market, and gone to seek his fortune. He left last Monday, and does not expect to stop until he reaches the Pacific, his destination being Northern California. Success to him.

The anniversary of the birthday of the Patrons of Husbandry will be celebrated at Macon Grange Hall, on Thursday Dec. 8th, commencing at 10:30 A. M. Picnic dinner at 12 M. Addresses by Mr. George Hannahey and the Hon. Dort. Howell. Members and their families are expected to be present.

The Masonic election in Lodge No 69, held last Friday evening, resulted as follows:

W. M.—Jos. H. Smith.
S. W.—Alfred James.
J. W.—John F. Hicks.
Sec'y—C. F. Field.
Treas.—Thos. Mark.

The installation will take place on Friday evening of next week, Dec. 9th.

Dr. Bennett will be at the Lilley House Monday Dec. 5th. Asthma, hay fever, dyspepsia, head and back aches, constipation and all that comes from it, all easily cured by his new mode of treatment. "Never fails." Hernia rupture radically cured in one week, be they 5 or 75 years of age. Of 1,000 within 2 miles of Tecumseh post-office is there one that wishes to come and see how this is done, then look up the results already given.

Have you got any rye stock?

The recent rain came very acceptable.

Ten cords of four foot wood wanted immediately at this office. Apply at once.

Woman's work is the name of a new family and domestic paper, just started at Athens, Georgia. It is a very neat sheet typographically, is ably edited, and is sold at fifty cents a year. Although published in the South it is designed for general circulation. Send for a sample copy.

We are indebted to some good friend for a copy of the Pratt County Register, published at Pratt, Kansas, containing a fine description of the city of Pratt. The first settlement was made there in 1880 and to day they they have a city exceeding Tecumseh in size and business. Thirteen brick blocks were erected there this summer in thirteen weeks.

Our Little Ones and the Nursery for December gives its usual quota of good things, and, something more in happy glimpses of holidays to which the little people are looking forward with great expectations. The stories and pictures will go straight to the juvenile heart, and set young ears listening for the first tinkle of bells denoting the approach of beloved Santa Claus. This beautiful monthly has its corps of special writers and artists; and all it contains is freshly gotten up with care to please and cultivate the class for whom it is designed.

The completion of the Eighteenth Volume of the Magazine of American History, with its December issue, is an event of interest. These elegant volumes, elaborately indexed, are preserved by its subscribers in the choicest of bindings, and they constantly increase in value with age. It is the only magazine extant where back numbers are in as great demand as current ones. The contents of the Holiday issue are most agreeably diversified. "Our Country Fifty Years Ago," by the Editor, presents a series of quaint pictures made at the time, and never before published in this country, together with incidents in connection with the journeyings of Lafayette in 1824 and 1825, not least among which is a graphic account of the entertainment by the fishmongers of the oldest club in America, at the State in Schuylkill. The December is a strong, instructive, and delightful number. Price, $5 a year. 743 Broadway, New York City.

TO OUR READERS.

We can not too strongly urge upon our readers the necessity of subscribing for a family weekly newspaper of the first class such, for instance, as The Independent, of New York. Were we obliged to select one publication for habitual and careful reading to the exclusion of all others, we should choose unhesitatingly The Independent. It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined. It has 32 folio pages and 24 departments. No matter what a persons religion, politics or profession may be, no matter what the age, sex, employment or condition may be, The Independent will prove a help, an instructor, an educator. Our readers can do no less than to send a postal for a free specimen copy, or for 50 cents the paper will be sent a month, enabling one to judge of its merits more critically. Its yearly subscription is $3.00, or two years for $5.00.

Those who desire to subscribe for The American Agriculturist as well as The Independent cannot make a better bargain than by accepting The Independent's offer to send both papers for one year for the sum of $3.75. Each subscriber will thus save 1 cents on the two papers.

Address, The Independent, No. 23 Broadway, New York City.

A Scholar's Horrible Death.

Lexington, Ohio, Nov. 30.—Professor Woodbridge, a member of the Normal university, having occasion to study the working of the steam engine, preparatory to a lecture upon the subject, Friday visited Gaedeke's flouring mill. It is supposed that he had an attack of dizziness and fell into the pit by the wheel, where his body was whirled by the wheel making 130 revolutions a minute. When the machinery was stopped the body was found in pieces. His pocketbook was thrown away, but his watch remained in his vest.

CLIPPINGS AND CONDENSATIONS.

They had a big dance at the Hudson rink on Thanksgiving.

Sheriff Whitmore is having some repairs made at the county jail.

Justice Long of Adrian is recovering from a serious attack of illness.

Justice T. M. Hunter has moved into his new office over Park's Dry Goods store in Adrian.

There is a large exodus of Michigan people to California this fall and many of them intend to locate there.

Hudson has had fewer weddings than usual since the license law went into effect. Tecumseh has done better than ever in that direction.

Tecumseh has a school marm who can walk four miles and a half, and not sweat enough to lay a hair. She ought to be given a stage route, and be allowed to transport the males.—Hudson Post.

An exchange observes: Never judge by appearances. A shabby coat may contain an editor, while the man wearing a high toned plug hat and sporting a dude cane may be a delinquent subscriber.

A. O. Miller is agent for the Stevenson piano harp, a musical instrument of exceedingly fine tone, and resembling very much the piano in sound. It requires but little instruction to learn and is very cheap in price.—Blissfield Advance.

Tecumseh is raising a fund for making a hole in the ground. Up to last Thursday $3,500 had been secured. We would advise our friends in Tecumseh to adopt the newspaper plan—cash in advance.—Blissfield Advance.

The young ladies cooking club of Hudson has disbanded, whereat the Gazette man mourns. Though he had praised their beauty and skill they didn't even send him a hard doughnut or a piece of indigestible cake. Ungrateful girls—unhappy scribe!—Morenci Observer.

H. E. Wilson, of Hell-way does not propose to "go hungry for pancakes the coming winter, as he lately had a grist of 44 bushels ground at one fell swoop." He will endeavor to scratch around likely this winter and prepare to raise corn and wheat next season.—Adrian Press.

Wright, there! Hold on! A horse hitched by telephone, by Manager Mason, dropped down and gave up the ghost Tuesday—whether from electricity emanating from the manager or from old age, is not certainly known. The Acker house of Jerseyville, an old landmark was destroyed by fire last Thursday morning. The fire department did good work in saving adjoining property. The loss will be from $4,000 to $5,000, with an insurance on building, contents and barn of $2,800. The barn was saved. It will probably be rebuilt.

The effort to revive a Rebecca lodge of Oddfellowship here favorably progresses. Our more than a dozen initiates will be on Tuesday evening. Some music and speechifying added to the interest of the meeting, and all present were much pleased with the general exercises and the prospects of the revived auxiliary of the I. O. O. F. A similar meeting will take place again in two weeks.—Morenci Observer.

Since our last issue local option petitions have been put into circulation here, and being quite numerously signed, we understand. With the existing temperance sentiment in Lenawee, there is no doubt but that more than enough signatures will be secured if enough be necessary to warrant the clerk in calling a special election as provided for by the new law.—Morenci Observer.

Sunday morning a week ago, John Pickard, a farmer residing five miles southeast of Brooklyn, drew $44.20 from a Tecumseh bank, which he intended to use in making a payment on a piece of land he had purchased. Late on Monday evening he discovered that the entire amount had been stolen from his pocket while he was asleep during the night. The most diligent search failed to reveal any trace of the thief, and the affair remained unexplained in a deep mystery for a time. Now some interesting family complications have been brought to light, causing a dissolution of the household, and further deponent saith not.—Britton Eagle.

THE JAMES—DeWOLF WEDDING.

Another of Tecumseh's fairest daughters has been won and a Tecumseh young man is the fortunate owner of the prize. Last evening at the residence of O. B. DeWolf, Esq., on Chicago street, the nuptial ritual was pronounced by Rev. C. E. Conley of Detroit, which bound together Mr. Alfred W. James and Miss Grace DeWolf, as man and wife. The ceremony itself was witnessed by a goodly number of relatives and intimate friends at the hour of seven. The bride was dressed in an embroidered Swiss gown with simple sash draperies. The groom was attired in the conventional full dress suit of plain black. Congratulations and refreshments followed the wedding ceremony.

Between the hours of eight and nine a general reception was given, which was largely attended by the young people of the village. Many guests from abroad enlivened the occasion by their presence, among whom were Rev. Mr. Conley, Miss Nellie Marsh, Messrs. Collins, Marsh and McPherson of Detroit; Mrs. Anna Newburn of Cleveland; Miss Maud Weller of Troy, Ohio; Mrs. Thompson of Adrian; Mr. Robert Evans of Toledo. Many other friends from abroad transmitted their regrets and were represented by mementoes. The array of gifts was brilliant and costly, some coming from other states and one from distant Oregon. Among these was a handsome sum of "spot cash" from the fathers of both bride and groom. The menu was plain but very appropriate, and the arrangements were so complete that over two hundred guests were served during the evening. At ten o'clock the happy pair donned their traveling wraps and left for the late Mackinaw train, accompanied by showers of rice and the hearty good byes of the company. They will make a brief visit in Chicago and then return to Detroit to reside, where Mr. DeWolf has already fitted up a handsome suite of rooms for their home.

The contracting parties need no introduction at our hands to Tecumseh society. The groom is a son of ex-supervisor James, a graduate of our High School, and a young man of fine business ability and prospects. The bride has always been a favorite in our social circles. The HERALD joins the sincere sentiments of all in wishing them a happy and prosperous voyage down the river of life.

A DICKENS ENTERTAINMENT.

Charles Dickens still lives. The characters made famous by him survive, and enjoy a good healthy growth, which is now somewhat accelerated by the public readings being given in this country by the son of the great writer. Charles Dickens Jr., is said to be a better reader than his father. It is not probable however that many Tecumseh people will have an opportunity to hear this gifted "son of a genius" read the verities of his sire. In view of this fact the Tecumseh Library Association is now arranging to give an entertainment in which much use will be made of the great fund of material found in Dickens several works. In short at some an day the Library Association will give a Dickens entertainment, or a "Pieceons of an entertainment" at the Opera House in which many of our local artists will participate. The full strength of the company will be presented, and the show will be well worthy the support of all lovers of amusement, and friends of the association. Date will be announced later. Keep your eyes open and your ear to the ground.

FOR HONOR'S SAKE.

"No," replied Dr. Daincourt to this name was not mentioned. Bainbridge, I know that you are not given to idle talk, there is always some meaning in what you say."

"Assuredly I am not in the mood for idle talk just now. Events are marching, unfortunately I am inclined to think, that we are on the brink of a great calamity. You have not yet told me all I wish to know concerning Miss Mabel Rutland. What manner of the family did you see?"

"Her mother, her father and herself," replied Dr. Daincourt.

"Do these comprise the whole of the family?"

"I do not know. I did not inquire."

"Give me some description of her parents."

"Her father," said Dr. Daincourt, "is a gentleman of about 60 years of age."

"Is there any doubt in your mind that he is a gentleman?"

"Not the slightest."

"Attached to his daughter—entertaining an affection for her?"

"I should certainly say so, but at the same time not given to sentimental demonstration."

"As to character, now?" I asked. "What impression did he leave upon you?"

"That he was stern, self willed, unrelenting. Hard to turn, I suspect, when once he is resolved."

"Like his brother," I observed. "Mr. James Rutland, who was on Layton's trial. These traits evidently run in the family. Now, as to his wife?"

"A gentle and amiable lady," said Dr. Daincourt, "some eight or ten years younger than her husband; but her hair is already grayer than his; it is almost white."

"She and her daughter resemble each other?" I remarked.

"Yes; and there is also on the mother's face an expression of devotion and self sacrifice. Her eyes continually overflowed when we were speaking of her daughter."

"Not so the father's eyes?"

"No; but he showed no want of feeling."

"Still, doctor," I said, "you gather from your one visit to the house that he is the master of it—in every sense, I mean."

"Most certainly the master."

"Ruling," I remarked, "with a rod of iron."

"You put ideas into my head," said Dr. Daincourt in a somewhat helpless tone.

"If they clash with your own, say so."

"They do not clash with my own, but I am not prone so suddenly to take such decided views. I should say you are right, Bainbridge, and that in his house Mr. Rutland's will is law."

"Would that be likely," I asked, "to account in any way for the expression of self sacrifice you observed on the faces of mother and daughter?"

"It might be so," said Dr. Daincourt thoughtfully.

"Proceed now," I said, "and tell me all that passed."

"But little remains to tell," said Dr. Daincourt. "I informed the parents that their daughter was suffering more from mental than from physical causes; that it was clear to me that there was a heavy trouble upon her mind, and that, until her trouble was removed, there was but faint hope of her getting well and strong. I am speaking in the dark. I said to the parents, and while I remain in ignorance of the cause, it is almost impossible for me to prescribe salutary remedies. Can you no hinting for me to assist the father. 'Can you not give her some medicine?' 'Yes, I can give her exercise.' I replied, 'but nothing that would be likely to be of benefit to her.' Indeed, the medicine necessary for her room is such a would be ordinarily prescribed by a medical man who had not reached the core of the patient's disease. 'If she goes on as she is going on now,' said the father, 'what will be the result?' 'Her strength is failing fast,' I replied; 'what little reserve she has to draw upon will soon be exhausted. If she goes on as she is going on now I am afraid, there will be but one result.' The mother burst into tears. The father fixed his steady gaze upon me, but I saw his lips quiver. 'We have called you in, Dr. Daincourt,' he said, 'because we have heard of wonderful cures you have effected in patients who have suffered from weak nerves.' 'I have been happily successful,' I said, 'in effecting cures, but I have never yet succeeded where a secret has been hidden from me.' At these words the mother raised her hands imploringly to her husband. 'Do you think that a secret is being hidden from you in this case?' asked the father. 'It is not for me to say,' I replied, 'it is simply my duty to acquaint you with the fact that your daughter's disease is mental, and that her condition is critical. Until I learn the cause of her grief I am powerless to aid her.' 'Will you oblige me by calling to-morrow?' asked the father, after a slight pause. 'Yes,' I said, preparing to depart, 'I will call in the afternoon, and, if you wish, will see your daughter again.' He expressed his thanks in courteous terms, and I took my leave. I should have come here earlier, Bainbridge, to relate this to you, but I have had other serious cases to attend to. A doctor's time is not his own, you know."

"I have something to tell you, doctor," I said, "with reference to your new patient, which will interest you. Mabel Rutland was once engaged to be married to Edward Layton, and I believe there was a deep and profound attachment between them."

"You startle me," he said, "and have given me food for thought."

When he bade me good night it was with the determination to extract, if possible, from Mabel Rutland's parents some information respecting her mental condition, which might be used to her benefit. For my part, I must confess to the hope, unreasonable as it may appear, that he may also be successful in obtaining some information which will assist me in the elucidation of the mystery upon which I am employed.

Cable message from Mr. Bainbridge, London, to Mr. Archibald Laing, U. S.

"Give me what particulars you can of Mrs. Mabel Rutland and her parents, and of her brothers and sisters, if she has any."

Cable message from Mr. Archibald Laing, U. S., to Mr. Bainbridge, London.

"Miss Mabel Rutland has no sisters. She has only a twin brother, Eustace, to whom she was passionately attached and devoted. This, brother and sister and [illegible] Rutland is of an implacable and relentless disposition, impatient of contradiction and obstinate to a degree. These qualities were exercised in my favor some years ago, when I paid court to Mrs. Rutland, in the hope of making her [illegible] [illegible] with me, but when I [illegible] not have doubt that she loved Edward Layton. I preferred to retire rather than [illegible] her unhappy. By so doing I [illegible] her estate, and it is for her sake I [illegible] to be cleared of the [illegible] against him. It is my belief that she still loves him, and she cannot be happy [illegible] Layton is cleared. I'll [illegible] her heart. I know, very little of her brother Eustace. He was [illegible] when I was in London, and I met [illegible] of videos. Mrs. Rutland [illegible] gentle, kindly hearted [illegible] I fear dominered over by her husband."

III.

I thank you for this information contained in your last cable. It [illegible] insight into the motives which have prompted you to step forward on Edward Layton's behalf, and I am gratified in being associated with you in the cause. When a counsel finds himself en rapport with his client, it is generally of assistance to him; he works with a better spirit.

Three days have passed since I wrote and dispatched to you the second portion of the narrative of my proceedings and progress. I was waiting anxiously for something to occur—I could not exactly say what—which would serve as an absolute stepping stone. Something has occurred which, although I have not yet discovered the key to it, will, I believe, prove to be of the utmost importance. You will understand later on what I mean by my use of the word "key," and when I tell you that this which I call the stepping stone is nothing more or less than the nine of hearts, you will give me credit for my prescience on the first production of that card in the criminal court. I felt convinced that it would be no insignificant factor in the elucidation of the Layton mystery.

I may say here that the progress we have made is entirely due to Dr. Daincourt. What I should have done had he not been unexpectedly called in to our assistance, it is difficult to say. I should not have been idle, but it is scarcely likely that, within so short a time, my actions would have led to the point we have now reached. Dr. Daincourt has allowed himself to be prompted by me to a certain extent, and his interest in his beautiful patient has been intensified by the friendship existing between us and by the esteem we both entertain for Edward Layton.

In accordance with the promise Dr. Daincourt gave to Mr. Rutland, he called upon that gentleman on the day following his first visit to the house. During the interval Miss Rutland's condition had not improved; it had, indeed, grown worse. There was an aggravation of the feverish symptoms, and her speech was wild and incoherent. Perhaps it would be more correct to say that it was wild and incoherent to those who were assembled at her bedside. I hold to the theory that there is a method in dreams, and I also hold to the theory that there is a method in the wildest utterances produced by the wildest delirium. I speak, of course, as a lawyer. Dr. Daincourt's position with respect to Miss Rutland was that of a physician. Had I heard the words uttered by Miss Rutland in her fevered state, I do not doubt that my legal training would have enabled me to detect what was hidden from Dr. Daincourt and the young lady's parents.

During this second visit to Miss Rutland, her father requested Dr. Daincourt to give him a private interview, in the course of which he elicited from the doctor an ascertainment of the views which Dr. Daincourt had expressed on the previous day. Mr. Rutland made a vain attempt to combat these views. He would have been glad to be assured that his daughter was suffering from a physical and not from a mental malady; but Dr. Daincourt was positive, and was not to be moved from his conviction. He emphasized his inability to treat the case with any hope of success, and he repeated his belief, if Miss Rutland were allowed to continue in her present condition without any effort being made to arrive at the cause of her mental suffering, that there could be but one result—death before the end of the year.

At the commencement of this interview between Mr. Rutland and Dr. Daincourt Mrs. Rutland was not present, but after it had lasted some twenty minutes or so her anxiety became so overpowering that she knocked at the door of the room in which the conversation was taking place and begged to be admitted. The look of appeal with which she accompanied her request could not refuse, and thus it was that she was present when Dr. Daincourt spoke in plain terms of the serious condition of his interesting patient. The mother's distress was painful, but it appeared to produce no impression upon her husband.

"And yet," said Dr. Daincourt, in narrating the affair to me, "I am sure that Mr. Rutland was inwardly suffering, and I am assured that he has a sincere affection for his daughter."

The interview terminated by Mr. Rutland requesting Dr. Daincourt to call again the next day, to which request the doctor gave a reluctant assent.

He called on the following day, with the same result. Again he saw the patient; again he had an interview with Mr. Rutland, at which Mrs. Rutland was present; again he emphasized his view of the young lady's condition; and again Mr. Rutland requested him to pay another visit upon his daughter. Dr. Daincourt objected. He told Mr. Rutland that, as matters stood, his visits were useless, and that in the absence of necessary information it was indistinct with to be relieved from them.

"And I feel it my duty," he said to the father, "to inform you that if you intend to do nothing further than it seems to me is your present intention, you are playing with your daughter's life."

These were grave words to use, but Dr. Daincourt is no ordinary man. His knowledge and experience lead him intuitively to correct conclusions, and his professional capacity he will not be trifled with.

"In these circumstances," he said to Mr. Rutland, "I must beg of you to summon some other physician in whom you have greater confidence."

"I have the highest confidence in you," said Mr. Rutland.

"You have not shown it," was Dr. Daincourt's rejoinder. "It is as though you have determined that you and not I shall be your daughter's physician."

However, he allowed himself to be prevailed upon to pay Miss Rutland yet another visit. But he gave his consent only upon the express stipulation that it should be his last unless Mr. Rutland placed him in possession of information which would enable him to fully understand the

I come now to the fourth interview, which was pregnant with results.

Upon presenting himself at the house he was received by Mrs. Rutland, who said to him:

"My husband has consented that I should tell you all you desire to know with respect to our dear child."

"You have consulted upon him to consent," said Dr. Daincourt.

"Yes," replied Mrs. Rutland. "I have thought it prudent upon him to consent. Dear doctor, you will save my child, will you not?"

"I will do all that lies in my power," said Dr. Daincourt.

"What is it you wish to know?" asked Mrs. Rutland.

"Everything that concerns your daughter," said Dr. Daincourt, "with respect to her disposition, habits, likings and aversions. She has a terrible weight upon her mind, and you must certainly have some suspicion of the cause. You may have more than a suspicion, you may have a positive knowledge. You must take nothing from me. Unless you are prepared to [illegible] I cannot undertake to continue my visits. You are her mother—you love her tenderly?"

"I love her with all my heart and soul," said Mrs. Rutland, weeping. "If my daughter is taken from me I shall not care to live."

"In deep sincerity, then," said Dr. Daincourt, "I declare to you that you may be acting as your daughter's enemy instead of her friend if you do not open your heart and mind to me freely and without restraint. Relate as briefly as you can, without omitting important points, the story of her life."

It was a simple, touching story which Mrs. Rutland disclosed, fragrant with all that is sweetest in woman. The Rutlands have but two children, Mabel and Eustace, who came into the world within a few minutes of each other. Between these children existed a most profound and devoted love, and to tear Eustace away from Mabel was like tearing the girl's heartstrings. The lad's love was the weaker of the two, as is usually the case, but he nevertheless adored his sister, who repaid him tenfold for all the affection he lavished upon her. They grew up together, shared each other's pleasures, had secret and innocent methods of communicating with each other which afforded them intense delight, and were inseparable until they reached the age of 18, when Eustace went to college. Hitherto his studies had been conducted at home, a home of peace and harmony and love, for, stern and implacable as Mr. Rutland was, he loved his children and his wife, but he loved something else equally well—his honor and his good name. While Eustace was absent at college, he and Mabel corresponded regularly.

"But," said the mother, "neither my husband nor myself was ever able to understand Eustace's letters to his sister. They were always written in the form of mystery letters. It had been their favorite amusement when they were children to discover and invent new methods of corresponding with each other, of which only they possessed the secret. 'There, mamma,' Mabel would say, with a laugh, giving me one of my dear Eustace's letters from college, 'read that!' But it might as well have been written in Greek for anything that I could make of it. Words and phrases were jumbled together without any meaning in them that I could discover, and the entire page was a perfect puzzle. Then Mabel would take the letter from me, and read it off as easily as possible; and I remember her saying once, 'If Eustace and I ever have any real secrets, mamma, we shall be able to tell them to each other through the post, without any person in the world being one bit the wiser.' Little did I think that the time would arrive when her words would bear a fatal meaning."

Eustace, then, being at college and Mabel at home, it unfortunately happened that the lad fell into evil ways. He got mixed up with bad companions. The hours that should have been employed in study were wasted in gambling and dissipation, and his career at college was by no means creditable. His father had set his heart upon Eustace obtaining honors at Oxford, and he was sorely and bitterly disappointed when the reports of his son's proceedings reached him. Unfortunately these reports did not come to his ears until mischief had been done, and it was at about this time that "Eustace returned home, declaring that he would never go back to college."

At about this time, also, momentous events were occurring in Mabel's life. A beautiful girl, with an amiable and [illegible] disposition, with no [illegible] ways and with a wealthy father moving in a great social position, it was not to be wondered at that she had suitors for her hand, and there were only two whose affection for her was regarded seriously by her family. One of these was Mr. Edward Layton, the other Mr. Archibald Laing.

Mabel's father favored the suit of Archibald Laing; Mabel's uncle, the gentleman who was upon the jury in the trial, favored the suit of Edward Layton. He was never weary of sounding the young man's praises, and it may be that this rather strengthened Mabel's father against Edward Layton. However, the young lady had decided for herself. She had given her heart to Edward Layton, and there grew between them an absorbing and devoted attachment.

While these matters were in progress Archibald Laing and Edward Layton were admitted freely to the house, and thus they had equal chances. But when the lady whom two men are in love with makes up her mind, the chances are no longer equal. It was not without a struggle that Archibald Laing abandoned his pretensions. From what am-ewer can prove he could not have loved Mabel with less strength than Edward Layton did. It was no small sacrifice on his part to relinquish his hopes of winning Mabel for his wife, more especially when her father was on his side. There were integrity, views of an affecting nature between him and Mabel. There were interviews, also, between him and Edward Layton. The two men had been friends long before they came into association with Mabel Rutland, and it speaks well for the generosity and nobility of their natures that these affairs of the heart—the like of which has been the cause of many a bitterness and unmanly and in turn their tragedy—kept out of sight. In the estimate of their character at this period Archibald Laing showed the higher nobility, for the reason that it devolved upon him to act voluntary and heartrending sacrifice. He informed the young lady's parents that he gave up all hope of obtaining their daughter's hand, and at the same time he declared that if it ever lay in his power to render Mabel or Edward Layton a service, he would not hesitate to render it whatever might be the cost. Nobly has he redeemed this pledge.

He suffered much—to such an extent, indeed, that he determined to leave the country, and find a home in another land. He bade the Rutlands farewell by letter, and realized an amazing fortune.

The field was thus left free for Mabel and Edward. Mr. Rutland was seriously displeased. He had been thwarted in a wish that was very dear to him, and [illegible] of man to forget the defeat. Although [illegible] tion was allowed to come to the house Mr. Rutland received him without favor, and it was only upon the imploring and [illegible] of his wife and daughter that he consented to an engagement between the young people. It was a half hearted consent which caused the parties to hesitate. Once than once he changed in their presence, and in the presence of his wife, but if anything evil could happen which would cast the slightest shadow of doubt or distrust upon Edward Layton, no power on earth should induce him to allow the marriage to take place. It was not necessary for him to impress upon them that above everything else in the world he was jealous of his good name. They knew this well enough, and were in a certain sense prepared for it. Edward Layton's [illegible] in more refected homes [illegible] they did not see the cloud that was hanging above them. It darkened slowly and steadily, and broke in such a terrible events, in the whirlpool of, which the happiness of Mabel and Edward was fated to be in gulfed.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS

The many friends of John Ede, Mr. Collum and wife were shocked at hearing of their great loss by fire which occurred at their home in Dakota one morning last week. John Ede had recently located at a railroad point near Harlem, which had bright prospects. He opened a general store and was doing a nice business, living over the store. That morning, with the thermometer at 15 degrees below zero, everything burned to the ground in a few moments and they were shelterless and penniless. In his letter to Frank Lancaster he says: "I got up about seven o'clock, shook down the stove in the store, put in some coal, and taking a couple of pails started after water for breakfast. When about ten rods from the building I heard a terrible noise, and on turning around everything was in a blaze. I dropped the pails and ran back crying fire! fire! When I reached the store Carrie, Mr. and Mrs. Bender and Mr. McCarthy were coming down through a cloud of smoke. We could do nothing but stand by and see everything go—we haven't a thing left to remind us of Clinton or Clinton friends. The insurance will not half cover the loss. We are now at mother's."

The supposition is that the coal being soft and covered with snow it generated such a quantity of gas as to cause an explosion, which seemed to set everything on fire in an instant. They only escaped with their lives.

Most of our citizens have read accounts of the large fire at Ypsilanti recently, viz. Ainsworth & Co.'s grain and feed store, but few of them, however, know that W. S. Whittlesey, a former well-known citizen of ours, was one of the firm. Such is the case, we regret to say, and the loss is a very serious one.

Miss Kate Cotton received the sad intelligence, one day recently, that her half brother, Charles Swartout, died at his home in Allegan County Nov. 16th. Many of our old citizens remember him well.

Geo. Auten, who was recently operated on before the class at Ann Arbor is rejoicing that it was successfully done and he gaining rapidly.

Adj. St. John returned Saturday from his trip to Branch County.

The concert Wednesday evening by the Tecumseh Band was very fine. The selections were good and the execution of a high order. It would be difficult to speak of each piece—suffice it to say that the concert was a success and appreciated by all. We congratulate our neighbors on having so fine a band—it is one that will do credit to any town. Although there was a good house, should they come again it would be packed.

The concert to be given Dec. 13th takes the place of the usual fair.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS

Lesson for December 11.

PARABLE OF THE TARES. MATT. XIII. 24-30.

NOTES.—"Before them."—To the multitude.——"Is likened."—Rather has become like.——"While men slept."—At night, while the men of the household were naturally resting. This is part of the realistic imagery of the parable.——"Tares."—Darnel. The zunin of the Talmud. Its common name in Palestine to-day is zuwan. It resembles wheat until its maturity. It is better, and is a strong soporific poison, acting injuriously on the brain and stomach. It was an act of malice. It was purely wanton and unprovoked. It was the malice of a devil.——"And brought forth fruit."—It was not until it "headed out" that it could be detected from the wheat. Then a child cannot mistake one for the other.——"Didst thou not sow good seed?"—Seed free from weed and darnel, carefully winnowed.——"And gather them up?"—It was customary in Palestine for farmers to weedout their grain fields.——"Ye root up the wheat.—The roots of both are entwined with each other. A stray stalk could be pulled up with safety; but the field was all covered with noxious weed, and most all of the wheat would have had to suffer.——"Let both grow." It was the best course left. The evil was done, and the husbandman wanted to make the best of it, but not at the expense of the good wheat. Though the tares might for the time being overshadow the wheat, yet in the end wheat would come out thriumphant. The tares were burned not only for fuel but also to prevent their spreading.

INSTRUCTION.—The parable teaches that within the visible Church are those that are not members of the invisible Church, and who will never have a part in it. In almost every church there are hypocrites. Blessed the church who can number among its saints in Heaven all its members on earth! That there are such hypocrites is no reason for distrusting the genuineness of the Church. A counterfeit coin only proves that there is a genuine coin, which may be counterfeited. Who would refuse to believe in a currency system because there are such imitations? So let no one be shaken in faith because all church members are not what they seem. It may argue the superior spiritual power of the Church that it is able to carry such parasites.

Jesus teaches also that man cannot safely make an arbitary separation of the wheat from the tares. That is the final prerogative of Christ the Judge. It is a too common fault to stigmatize So-and-so as unworthy of communion. If any one seems to be hypocritical, to you by excellent example and judicious help try to make him what Christ would approve of. But remember, it is God who is outraged, not you, and he can take care of his own case well enough.

This bit of malicious mischief was done while the family were asleep. That is the cowardice of sin. It does not dare to meet the honest man face to face in the day time. This kind of malice has not yet entirely died out. The careless boy may think it a smart thing to annoy his neighbor at night in some ridiculous or wicked way to pay him up for some fancied wrong. This is mean and cowardly. Out with it in the daylight whatever you have to do.

The mischief done, the enemy cleared out. Rather a common trait among the disciples of the Evil One, to do the dirty act or say the malicious word and let others take the consequence.

Remember that all sin sown within or without is wanton and unprovoked malice.

Men are as much puzzled now as ever to know whence the evil comes. Many excuse sin in themselves by calling it "original." The enemy is bound to sow the seed; no one can prevent that, but each one is responsible for the growth of the seed in him. Don't bother about where it comes from, but be troubled how long it abides with you.

These tares were poisonous to the body. All sin is doubly so to the body and soul. Some poisons act instantly, others take months to kill. The same with sin. It may require a post-mortem examination to detect a poison. It may need a final judgment to lay bare a sin.

The good is permanent and will finally triumph. The evil is impermanent and will finally be unmasked and destroyed. There is no dualism in Christianity.

Mothers and nurses should always remember that disappointment never attended the use of Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup. Price only 25 cents a bottle.

Ruined by Wine and Women.

[illegible] Joseph M. Diaz, employed as [illegible] & Suarez cigar importers at [illegible] West Lake street, was arrested Saturday evening for the embezzlement of about $[illegible] from the firm. He is a fine-looking young Spaniard and is a distant relative of the president of the Mexican republic. His father is said to be a New York millionaire. Young Diaz formed the acquaintance of Mamie Cox, alias "Kentucky Bess," a sister of Mrs. Captain Hall, who was charged with killing her husband in June, 1887. Diaz and Bess succeeded in spending a good deal of money during the past few months and his employers, learning of his prodigality, made an investigation and found that he was short in his accounts. He had collected numerous bills for the firm for which he had made no return. After his arrest Diaz made full confession of his crime and said he had been ruined by wine and women.

FOR HONOR'S SAKE.

The cause lay not in themselves. It lay in Eustace Rutland. It was he who was responsible for all.

He was in London, in partial disgrace with his father. He was without a career; he had already contracted vicious and idle habits; he was frequently from home, and although his father questioned him severely, he would give no truthful account of his movements and proceedings. Some accounts he had given, but his father knew instinctively that they were false or evasive. A [illegible] could obtain no satisfaction from his son. Mr. Rutland, aware of the perfect confidence which existed between Eustace and Mabel, applied to her for information; but she would not utter one word to her brother's harm. Her father could extract nothing from her, and there gradually grew within him an idea that there was a conspiracy against him in his own house, a conspiracy in which Edward Layton was the principal agent. It was natural, perhaps, that he should think more hardly of this stranger than of his own children.

Had he set a watch upon his son, he might have made discoveries which would have been of service to all, and which might have averted terrible consequences. But proud and self willed as he was, it did not occur to him to do anything which in his view savored of meanness. His son Eustace went his way, therefore, to sure and certain ruin. When he was absent from home he corresponded regularly with his sister; and Mr. Rutland sometimes demanded to see this correspondence.

"You can make nothing of it, papa," said Mabel. "Eustace and I do not correspond like other people."

He insisted, nevertheless, upon seeing these letters, and Mabel showed them to him. As he could not understand them, he demanded that she should read them intelligently to him; but it being a fact that there was always something in Eustace's correspondence which would deepen his father's anger against him, the young girl refused to read them. This, as may be supposed, did not tend to pacify Mr. Rutland. It intensified the bitterness of his heart toward those whom he believed were conspiring against him. He applied to Edward Layton.

"You are in my daughter's confidence," he said to the young man, "and as you have wrung from me a reluctant consent to an engagement with her, I must ask you to give me the information which she withholds from me."

He met with a somewhat rebuff. Edward Layton declared that he would not violate the confidence which Mabel had reposed in him. At one time Mr. Rutland said to Edward Layton:

"My [illegible] has been absent from home for several days. Have you seen him?"

"Yes," replied Edward, "I have seen him."

"But he would say nothing further."

The young man was in a most painful position. Mabel had exacted from him a solemn promise that he should [illegible] nothing of her brother, and he was strictly honorable [illegible]. He had another reason for his silence, and it [illegible] the fear of the sorrow which Mr. Rutland [illegible] if he knew that he would be his [illegible] from him.

The explanation of this other reason, which unhappily was a personal one, brings upon the scene a person who played a conspicuous part in the drama of real life, and who is now in his grave. This person was Edward Layton's father.

"What was the nature of the relationship," said Mrs. Rutland, "between the gentleman and my dear son Eustace? I do not know. All that I do know is that they were in association with each other, and, I am afraid, not to a good end. It came, also, by some strange means, to the knowledge of my husband, and a frightful scene occurred between him and Edward Layton, in which Mabel's lover was dismissed from the house. My husband withdrew the consent he had given to the engagement, and used words which, often since which I have thought of them, have made me shudder. They were so unnecessarily cruel and severe. If from this day, my husband had to the young man that you, my daughter, was [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

DICKENS ON

Not the redoubtable Don M. the Postmaster General from Michigan, but the great moral, intellectual, and amusing entertainment to be given by the Tecumseh Library association in the Opera House, Thursday evening, Dec. 15. A glimpse or two behind the curtain enables us to assure the public that a rare treat is in store for them. We are not at liberty to give away the whole program, but there will be a great "spectacular parade," composed wholly of characters of world wide fame. There will be music and tableaux and a realistic representation of "Fezziwig's Ball," together with the inimitable Mrs. Jarley, and a swell collection of her premium "wax figgers." The "Trial" scene in the celebrated case "Bardell vs. Pickwick" will be presented with a full cast of characters, and ably interpreted by artists of local renown. The jury alone in this case represents enough talent, intelligence and beauty to run a first class star comedy company. The Library Association deserves encouragement and now the opportunity is afforded our citizens to extend this recognition and encouragement, and at the same time witness an entertainment worth many times the cost of admission. Tickets only 15 cents.

PROSPERITY AMID PERIL.

doctrines and aims much that is plausible, and does not approve the extreme and violent methods of these destructionists. It demands the "nationalization of land and all means of transportation. Only then can the products of labor be justly shared by the State must own all the land, must own and manage all the capital of every kind, and all the productive industries. Private property must be reduced to a minimum, and private [illegible] Some of these propositions have a flattering look to discontented working men who feel that they are not receiving a fair share of the growing wealth of the world, and on this discontent socialism feeds. Hence it finds adherents within the labor organizations, and many of these, with more or less disrepute, may yet be the hands of the socialists last one.

But this moderate form of socialism tends to a more radical form. It regards the shoulds of social disorder. The rights of which is unknown to society can never exist on the basis of socialism. In all its forms it is an enemy of society, and a dangerous power in our land.

The vexed questions of capital and labor can not be solved on the theory of socialism. Something else must bring peace out of the state of war that exists in the industrial world, if peace is ever to come. The sooner the working men learn that the socialistic party is their worst enemy, the better it will be for them, and for all concerned. I believe the remedy for evils of which the laboring classes justly complain is to be found not in the overthrow, but in the readjustment and Christianization of the present industrial system. The wage system is no doubt radically defective, and is, in the coming evolutions of the industrial order, to give place to a better system of relations between man and man. I believe, with many, that some equitable plan of PROFIT SHARING is to take its place. Notable experiments in this line have been made that are full of promise. But whatever plan of adjustment is to prevail: when capital and labor shall learn that they are interdependent, that their interests are interlinked; when in the relations of employer and employed, selfishness shall give place to humanity, and jealousy and hate shall give place to charity and co operation; when employers in the management of their capital shall take into account the interests of the men by whose labor their gains are secured, and workingmen shall appeal for the settlement of disputes to sober arbitration instead of strikes and lockouts and boycotts, a brighter day will dawn in the industrial world.

THE RUM POWER.

There is the Liquor element. The past year has brought signal conflicts with the rum power, in which the wrong has gained an apparent and formal triumph. Four states have voted on the question of constitutional prohibition—Michigan, Texas, Tennessee and Oregon—and in each case the proposition has been defeated. In our own state, indeed, this result was obtained only by outrageous frauds on the part of the liquor power—a fact which few will pretend to question or deny. In the other three states, however, the saloon triumphed by a decided majority. But in these results there is no real cause for discouragement. On the contrary, these events have served to educate public sentiment, to reveal the real strength, resources, spirit and tactics of the enemy, to develop an increased and more pronounced prohibition conviction, to bring the friends of prohibition into more practicable harmony, and inspire them with stronger confidence in the righteousness of their cause, and faith in its final success. The cause of prohibition was never so securely intrenched in the convictions of the people as to day. Every fresh display of the hideous deformity of the rum monster only hastens the day when indignant freemen will trample him beneath their feet. Whatever transient triumphs it may seem to enjoy, one thing is sure: in this "land of the free, and home of the brave," the saloon is doomed.

Of the alien spirts in our social life, this is by far the most thoroughly organized, aggressive and insolent to-day. No mere dangerous foe of peace and order confronts us, for a mixed multitude of baneful forces trains under its hateful standard. With the blight of the pit, it destroys our manhood, degrades our womanhood, ruins our industries, wastes our resources, weakens our defences, fills our streets with bitter complainings, and glories in the shame of the state. The remedy for the evils wrought by this ruinous traffic is the one absorbing question now before the American people. All other questions of state to-day pale before this flaming issue. Of this problem there is only one solution, and that is PROHIBITION state and national, universal and absolute. And prohibition can never be made secure until engrafted upon Constitution of new. This is the one demand of the hour, and must never be relaxed. Recent defeats, and the increasing insolence of the foe will serve only to unite the friends of the reform in making this demand more imperative and uncompromising. If you speak of party policy, and ask me how I vote after saying this, I shall answer, with the editor of the N. Y. Christian Advocate, "I vote as I please." I own allegiance to no party, and surrender my convictions to none. With respect to the necessary political complexion of this question, however, I have this further to say: no political party can any longer successfully train sails between the dram shops and the honest friends of temperance. They must be squarely ranged on the one side or the other. No party can hope to gain or retain power in this "land of the free," which does not take high ground on this momentous question. Whatever party, facing this burning issue, consents to ignore it, or stoops to curry favor with the liquor power, or in the crisis of the times pauses to dabble in half-way measures, will inevitably be trampled under the conquering feet of the on marching hosts of American freemen. And the sooner it meets this overthrow, the better for the country. It is not for me to predict the precise detail or process of the coming conflict. Nay, the battle is on. Whatever the proximate result, the reform will go on until light and sobriety shall triumph; until Michigan and the nation shall be redeemed. When this is accomplished, we may celebrate a grand universal Thanksgiving. [illegible] ty and cordial good will, let all good men unite their strength against a united foe, in support of every right and honest effort to secure this grand [illegible] glorious day of freedom.

GAMBLING.

There is the Gambling element, representing one of the worst vices of the times—a mania and a malady which exists to an alarming extent, corrupting [illegible] social and business circles, and often treading in specious disguises, the paths of religion and philanthropy. Washington Gladden styles the gambling mania "by far the most dangerous of the unsocial forces threatening the destruction of society." He does not except even intemperance itself. Thousands of our best young men are ruined every year by the low gambling places and practices that exist in every considerable community. But, says Mr. Gladden, "the injury done by society by those forms of gambling that are recognized and undisguised is trifling when compared with the damage done by that form of gambling which wears the mask of business. Not only the stocks of wealthy companies, but all the staples of agriculture and manufacture, the very necessaries of life, are used in the immense gambling operations of speculators in margins. "Men who never own any of these kinds of property spend their lives in gambling in them, or rather about them—betting on their future prices, and doin their best, by such reports, true or false, as they can circulate, and such influences, good or bad, as they can bring to bear, to raise or lower these future prices, so as to make them correspond with their bets." The result of these operations is a fluctuation of values a derangement of business, a forced increase in the price of the necessaries of life, often in the very face of pinching cold and poverty that robs the poor of the very means of subsistence to fill the gamblers' laps with princely fortunes. "Every cent made by this class of men is taken from the industrial classes with no compensation." They do what the saloon keeper does, grow rich by the plunder of their neighbors, mass their enormous fortunes by preying upon the product of other men's industry; their gains are the wholesale robbery of society. Not the employers of labor, but these gamblers in stocks and produce—these are the knaves who plunder the workingmen of the profits of their industry. The man who follows this trade is, to quote again the author so often quoted in this paragraph, "as truly an enemy of society as if he went about picking his neighbors' pockets or setting their harvest fields on fire." If we cry, down with the saloon, as the corrupter of youth and the enemy of home and country, so let us abolish this abominable gambling system that curses us with a conscienceless plutocracy—a pack of public thieves and robbers.

CHRISTIANITY OUR ONLY HOPE.

These are a few of our most threatening social enemies. I cannot speak of others that also exist among us. What shall save us from these internal perils that threaten the life of the Republic? In a word, Christianity alone can save us. This alone contains the solution of all the social problems that press for solution. Education, commerce, culture, material growth—these can never make us secure. In the conserving power of the Christian religion lies the nation's only hope of perpetuity. Our worst foes are these internal sources of demoralization. Great and prosperous nations decline and perish from within. Our greatest need is that internal moral soundness which Christianity alone can give. Our national prosperity bears within itself the seeds of decay and death, unless built on the vital principles of Gods' revealed truth. Our fathers laid the foundations of this nation in Christian conviction and conscience. Americans can never afford to forget that it is not intelligence, but the deep and all-controlling moral life of American society that has given stability to American institutions. The future is secure only as this sublime faith and virtue remains the vital force in our civilization. Our perpetuity depends upon the eternal supremacy of conscience. "The joy of the Lord" is the "strength" of our country.

We would fain believe that our past is the true prophecy of our future. Though compelled to contend, with such an array of internal forces repugnant to the spirit of our institutions, we need not "despair of the Republic." We may have confidence still in the moral convictions of this Christian nation, grounded in the eternal word of divine truth. Let these be preserved, and we are secure. The Christian faith shall vitalize and fortify our institutions, preserve our liberties, and secure to us, amid all our perils, a true and stable prosperity. Thus our sons may be as plants grown vigorous in their youth; our daughters as polished corner pillars, supporting and gracing our Temple of Liberty; our garners full, affording all manner of store; all our industries prosperous; our arteries of trade freighted with the wealth of the world; no foreign troubles; no internal complaintings; a prosperous and happy people whose God is Jehovah. May this be our country's destiny.

OBITUARY

Charles H. McConnell was born on the 27th day of December 1848, and passed the most of his years on earth in his community. He was a bright and precocious school boy, and at the age of fifteen he left the school desk and entered the office of the Tecumseh Herald. He rapidly mastered the art of type setting and became a proficient printer. During the incumbency of Webster Anderson as postmaster, he served as assistant clerk in the office for some time. In 1868 he removed to Big Rapids and opened a book store. In 1870 he sold this business and became associated with Hon. E. O. Rose in publishing the Pioneer Magnet. Selling out his interest therein he returned to Tecumseh and was again for several months connected with the HERALD establishment. About six years ago, he accepted the position of head book keeper for Buckley, Lemon and Hoops, the largest wholesale grocery firm in Grand Rapids, which position he held until his death. In 1879 he was married to Frances M. Porter of Big Rapids, who, with one son sixteen years of age, survives him. [illegible] year since he began to show symptoms of consumption, but he manfully struggled on, fighting against fate, until one month ago when he took to his room. His remains were brought home on Tuesday. Yesterday forenoon funeral services were held at his father's residence on Maumee street, conducted by Rev. J. Phelps assisted by Rev. [illegible] H. Babbitt, and his lifeless body was laid into the cold earth in the beautiful cemetery where his sleeping father had officiated as sexton for so many many years. Charles was a young man of fine business qualities, generous to a fault and friendly to every one.

Many years of usefulness seemed opening before him but the grand messenger stood ready at his side. His death will be sincerely mourned by a large circle of relatives and friends.

A FRANKLIN BIRTHDAY PARTY

On Wednesday Nov. 30th, about thirty relatives of Dea. Cook assembled at his home to extend to him their congratulations on his safe arrival at his seventy-fifth birthday. The day in its beauty was in keeping with the spirit of the occasion, and seemed to rejoice with us that the life of our brother had been spared to his family and community so many years. The time was spent in a very happy social manner.

A number of presents testified to the high esteem in which the host and hostess are held. Among these was a book from a brother-in-law, Rev. Henry Seymore of Hawley, Mass, entitled Fifty years and Beyond. A letter from Mr. Seymore was read by Mr. Clarence Cook. Letters were received from a sister-in-law, Mrs. Mary Bliss of Holly N. Y. from a brother-in-law, James M. Hosford Esq. of Quincy Ill. and from a nephew J. E. Hosford of the treasury department at Washington, D. C.

The lines below read by Mrs. Clarence Cook, were composed for the occasion by Mrs. Bliss.

While not unmindful of the fact that one who has passed his three score years and ten, is in the evening of life, we earnestly hope and pray that the Divine Mercy which has given our brother so many years of usefulness, may long stay the shadows and bless his life with peace and strength.

We come to-day, my Brother,
Through many miles away,
To give thee heartfelt greeting
On this, thy natal day.

"We cannot come in person,
In heart we will be there.
Around the board we'll gather,
And every pleasure share.

"We'll welcome each new comer,
We'll kiss the baby bright,
No cloud shall cast a shadow
O'er us from morn till night.

"For, have we any promise
Of even one more day?
Then crowd each hour with pleasure
Too soon they'll pass away.

Threescore years and ten, aye more,
Have to thy life been given,
While many who in you loved of yore,
Have left thy home for heaven.

These loving ones for thee await,
Till thy life's work is done,
They'll watch for thee at heaven's gate,
Till God shall call thee home.

"And when the last milestone is passed
Lifes burdens all laid down,
How sweet to hear these words at last
"Come and receive thy crown."

"What matter then, though no more year's
Should thy life be given.
How blest to change this world of tears,
For untold joys in Heaven.

"But, ere the summons comes to thee,
May happiness be thine,
May sickness, pain be ne'er thy guest,
But love for thee and thine."

PLANNING A STILL HUNT.

MEETING OF MEN AND WOMEN WHO NEVER SMILE.

Important Conference of Prohibition Leaders to Prepare for the Campaign of 1888—A Number of States Not Represented but a Large Attendance of Anti-Saloonists—Finch's Successor Selected.

CHICAGO, Dec. 2.—As early as 9:30 o'clock Wednesday morning the representatives of the various Prohibition societies of the country began to crowd into the Grand Pacific parlors. Very few delegates were present at 10 o'clock, and the men all wore white ties, and had a negro-like clerical appearance. There was any thing a number of reporters.

PROF. SAMUEL DICKIE, president of the W. C. T. U., generally probable the most noticeable of women was Frances E. Willard, with her gold-rimmed spectacles and benevolent face, whose hand very nearly was anxious to shake. Though the lady bore up bravely her forehead was frequently wrinkled when some horny handed Prohibitionist would give the delicate fingers, too tight a squeeze.

Miss Willard was accompanied by a short little woman with a complexion quite copperish, who attracted no little attention as she was introduced to the leading delegates present. This was Miss Pandita Ramabai, a Hindoo princess, who is here in behalf of the establishment of mission schools in her native country.

CONFERENCE IN SESSION.

The conference being called to order, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" was sung, and Rev. A. B. Leonard, into Prohibitionist candidate for governor of Ohio, offered prayer. The chairman was Mr. R. F. Sangerdorph, of Michigan. Upon calling the roll thirteen states and eight territories were found unrepresented. As Secretary Van Fleet, of this city, called Kansas, John P. St. John walked up to the front and was greeted with ringing cheers.

The first real business of the session was the selection of a national committee chairman. The committee, as per roll-call, was not full, the western members present being as follows:

The committee adjourned at [illegible] o'clock and [illegible] held in the afternoon [illegible] of Prohibition papers, the large [illegible] committee, in Ohio and the Michigan committees, and [illegible] held meetings for the discussion of measures that will come before the convention.

At the afternoon session Samuel D. Gordon, of Michigan, was elected chairman of the national committee by a vote of [illegible] to 12 votes for A. A. Hopkins, of New York, and [illegible] Dickie, of Wisconsin. Mr. Dickie accepted the honor, and [illegible] in making a speech. He said [illegible] regularly organized democratic party, [illegible] process of [illegible] Michigan, [illegible] the Michigan [illegible] shoulder with the Republicans [illegible] Democrats [illegible] Republicans [illegible] Democrats [illegible] Republicans [illegible] Democrats [illegible]

The Farmers' Union met at Mr. John Cadmus' Friday evening, Dec. 2d. Owing to the condition of the weather the attendance was not as [illegible] question, "Which is the most profitable for the farmer to raise, the fine or fine wooled sheep?" was then discussed. The discussion was to be opened by Mr. H. J. Williams, but he not being present it was opened by Mr. W. C. Hicks.

Mr. Hicks.—I may be little experience in raising sheep, but am in favor of the coarse wooled sheep. Since my boyhood I remember hearing farmers are [illegible] selling off their fine wooled sheep. The price of wool has [illegible] the farmer has a flock of coarse wooled ewes they are of more [illegible] than a flock of fine ones. Mr. Hicks. I have had no experience in raising sheep. I have not kept sheep for a number of years. But from observation I believe it is not the fine wool profit in coarse wooled sheep because they are much more hardy.

Mr. Sheltzer.—I am in favor of the fine wooled sheep, for a farmer can keep three fine wooled sheep for the same as one coarse wooled one.

Mr. J. VanVleet.—My experience teaches me that coarse wooled sheep are more profitable than the fine. In every few years the country is overstocked. I think that coarse and fine wooled sheep should be kept throughout the country.

Mr. F. Davidson.—All have a preference. In the last year I have clear a good profit and have a good flock left. I prefer the fine-wooled sheep. The wool averaged seven pounds.

Mr. Raymond.—My experience is with the fine-wooled sheep. Can keep more sheep on less pasture. Coarse-wooled sheep require larger pasture. We have a flock that sheared from seven and one-half to eight pounds. Received $2.25 per head for wool. Then, considering the value of the lambs at present prices and [illegible] the hay and grain fed, we found that we had received over forty-one per cent interest on the money invested.

Dr. VanNess.—I am in favor of fine wooled sheep because I can keep more at a less expense and realize more profit from them. I think there should be both kinds kept in the country.

The meeting adjourned to meet at Mrs. Jane McLain's Friday evening, Dec. 16th, when the following program will be presented:

Song—Choir.
Rec.—Ella McLain.
Dec.—John Cadmus, Jr.
Violin solo—John VanVleet.

THE N. L. FARMERS' CLUB.

This club met at J. F. N. Bowen's on the evening of Nov. 23rd with a good attendance. Visitors were present from the Farmer's Social, Farmer's Union, Franklin and Tecumseh, and Pine and West Raisin clubs.

Minutes of last meeting approved; a committee appointed to confer with like committee from neighboring clubs in regard to an institute the coming winter. Then came the literary part of the program which was mostly musical.

Instead of a question for discussion a question box was opened which brought forth questions not only relating to farming, but on most all subjects. I can only give you a few of the many, to give an idea of what was asked.

"Will it pay the farmer to raise trotting horses and buy his work horses?" Answer—No it will not.

"Can a farmer buy western corn cheaper than he can raise it?" Answer—Not unless he is too lazy to work.

"How does the Chipmunk dig his hole without throwing out any dirt?" Here's a big for the class in natural history to crack, as no one present could give a satisfactory answer.

"Who do you think will be the next President?" Answer—Can tell better after the votes are counted.

"Will the music of the N. L. Quartett keep crows out of a cornfield?" Answer—I should think it would.

"Will Clem Brand tell for the benefit of young gentlemen and old bachelors what the expense of the new marriage license is?" Answer—Find out by experience; that is the way I got my information.

The next meeting is to be held at the residence of M. G. Updyke, on Wednesday evening, Dec. 7th, with the following Program:

Music.—N. L. Quartette.
Rec.—Elsie Updyke.
Select Reading—Mrs. J. F. N. Bowen.
Music—Mrs. Tobias Mudgett.
Rec.—Clara Fuller.
Select Reading.—W. B. Keyser.
Chip Basket.—Don Bowen.
Song—Mrs. Allen Wells.

The Question was one taken from the question box: "Which pays the best, to break up sod every year for [illegible] Led by James Updyke, Fay Derby and A. Welch.

WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE?

Among a large class of people there seems to be a distinction drawn between indigestion and dyspepsia. One will say, "I am troubled with indigestion." Another will say, "I suffered with indigestion a long time, but never knew I was to have dyspepsia." Another will ask the answer very seriously, "Do you think there is any danger of this indigestion turning to dyspepsia?" The doctor knows full well that a little medicine will bring him all right. How much better the patient would feel to be informed that they were one and the same, he only can tell. Most of the medical fraternity, however, do this.

There are four classes of indigestion of dyspepsia, viz: anatomical change in the digestive organs; changes in digestive secretions; morbid conditions of the nerves; and pulmonic [illegible] Many [illegible] to look for [illegible] to consult the symptoms and then [illegible] have the name of some disease [illegible] symptoms.

The most popular and successful method now in use is by inhalation. Judge Flanders, of New York, says: "For many years I suffered from weak digestion and dyspepsia. My health was not at any time vigorous. In 1879 I was all run down in strength and spirits. Energy and ambition had departed. My old law partner, Vice President Wheeler, told me that the doctor had said to him that he never expected again to see me alive. I commenced taking Compound Oxygen, to my great surprise I began to feel better in a week. In a month I improved so greatly that I was able to come to my office and do some legal work. I grew stronger, taking Compound Oxygen all the time, until, to my astonishment and that of my friends I was fit as ever for hard work.

"My present health is such that I can, without hardship or undue exertion, attend to the business of my profession as of old. My digestion is good, my sleep is as natural and as easy as it ever was, and my appetite is as hearty as I could desire.

This Compound Oxygen has a history wonderful in its way, and worth reading by everybody whose life is worth preserving. That history is embodied in a very interesting two hundred page treatise, which is sent free, by mail, on application. Please address Drs. Starkey & Palen, 152 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE

With the November, 1887, issue THE CENTURY commences its thirty fifth volume with a regular circulation of almost 250,000. The War Papers and the Life of Lincoln, increased its monthly edition by 100,000. The latter history having recounted the events of Lincoln's early years and given the necessary survey of the political condition of the country, reaches a new period, with which his secretaries were most intimately acquainted. Under the caption

Lincoln in the War,

the writers now enter on the more important part of their narrative, viz.: the early years of the War and President Lincoln's part therein.

Supplementary War Papers.

following the "battle series" by distinguished generals, will describe interesting features of army life, including from Libby Prison, narratives of personal adventure, etc. Gen. Sherman will write on "The Grand Strategy of the War."

Kennan on Siberia.

Except the Life of Lincoln and the War Articles, no more important series has ever been undertaken by THE CENTURY than this of Mr. Kennan's. With the previous preparation of four years travel and study in Russia and Siberia, the author undertook a journey of 15,000 miles for the special investigation here required. An introduction from the Russian Minister of Interior admitted him to the principal mines and prisons where he became acquainted with some three hundred State exiles,—Liberals, Nihilists, and others, and the series will be a startling as well as accurate revelation of the exile system, the many illustrations by the artist and photographer, Mr. George A. Frost, who accompanied the author, will add greatly to the value of the articles.

A Novel by Eggleston

with illustrations will run through the year. Shorter novels will follow by Cable and Stockton. Shorter fictions will appear every month.

Miscellaneous Features

will comprise several illustrated articles on Ireland, by Charles DeKay; papers touching the field of the Sunday School Lesson, illustrated by E. L. Wilson; wild Western life, by Theodore Roosevelt; the English Cathedrals, by Mrs. Van Rensselaer, with illustrations by Pennell; Dr. Buckley's valuable papers on Dreams, Spiritualism, and Clairvoyance; essays in criticism, art, travel and biography; poems; cartoons; etc.

By a special offer the numbers for the past year containing the Lincoln history may be secured with the year's subscription from November, 1887, twenty four issues in all, for $6.00, or, with the last year's numbers handsomely bound, $7.50.

Subscriptions taken at the HERALD Office.

ST. NICHOLAS.

For Young Folks.

Since its first issue, in 1873, this magazine has maintained, with undisputed recognition, the position it took at the beginning,—that of being the most excellent juvenile periodical ever printed. The best known names in literature were on its list of contributors from the start,—Bryant, Longfellow, Thomas Hughes, George MacDonald, Bret Harte, Bayard Taylor, Frances Hodgson Burnett, James T. Fields, John G. Whittier; indeed the list is so long that it would be easier to tell the few authors of note who have not contributed to "the world's child magazine."

The Editor, Mary Mapes Dodge, author of "Hans Brinker; or, The Silver Skates," and other popular books for young folks, and for grown up folks,—too, has a remarkable faculty for knowing and entertaining children. Under her skillful leadership, ST. NICHOLAS brings to thousands of homes on both sides of the water knowledge and delight.

St. Nicholas in England.

It is not a case in America that ST. NICHOLAS has made its great success. The London Times says: "It is above anything we produce in the same line." The "Scotsman" says: "There is no magazine that can successfully compete with it."

The Coming Year of St. Nicholas.

The fifteenth year begins with the number for November, 1887, and the publishers can announce, Serial and Short Stories by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, Frank R. Stockton, H. H. Boyesen, Joe Chandler Harris, J. T. Trowbridge, Geo. Richard M. Johnston, Louisa M. Alcott, Professor Alfred Church, William H. Rideing, Washington Gladden, Harriet Prescott Spofford, Amelia E. Barr, Frances Courtenay Baylor, Harriet Upton, and many others. Edmund Alton will write a series of papers on the "Routine of the Republic"—how the President works at the White House, and how the affairs of the Treasury, the State and War Departments, etc., are conducted. Jos. O'Brien, a well known Australian journalist, will describe "The Great Island Continent"; Elizabeth Robins Pennell will tell of "London Christmas Pantomimes." Alice in Wonderland, etc.; John Burroughs will write "Meadow and Woodland Talks with Young Folk," etc., etc. Mrs. Burnett's short serial will be famous "Little Lord Fauntleroy," which appeared in ST. NICHOLAS. Subscriptions taken at the HERALD office.

THE PAPER is on file in Philadelphia at the Newspaper Advertising Agency of Messrs. N. W. AYER & SON, our authorized agents.

WHEN THOU ART NEAR.

When thou art near the cares which cloy on the prey,
And seem my very soul to overweary,
Vanish as swift as night's dark clouds, which steal
Across the skies and day's glad portals seal.
Blown far and wide by winds of new born day.
Some hidden grief, now long remembered, may Remain, but holy thoughts that sovereign sway
Of years gone by—for peace and joy I feel
When thou art near.

And, dear one, if, while being far away,
From me some unknown sorrow come and lay
Itself hard on my heart, then I would fain
And pray to him to send thee back to heal
The wounds which pain me, but no longer stay,
When thou art near.

—William Bartlett Tyler.

FIGHT WITH THE DEVIL.

Old Fundy was a well digger. The greater part of his life was spent in the bowels of the earth, and when he was on its surface he went about with his head bowed and his eyes fixed on the ground, as though he was seeking a hole big enough for him to crawl into and burrow like a mole, as his natural propensity suggested. When he was digging a well he almost lived in it, going down early in the morning, taking his dinner with him and staying there all day.

He was a dark skinned, grim old man, with straight black hair, streaked with gray, a face peppered over with little blue spots—the effects of the premature explosion of a blast—and black eyes that seemed to avoid the glaring light of the sun.

How he got the name of Fundy is not positively known—for that was not his real name—but it may have been bestowed upon him by some classical wag, who, in virtue of his occupation, christened him De Profundis, which being shortened to Fundis eventually became Fundy.

The negroes regarded him with a feeling somewhat akin to awe, averring that he had actually had a peep into his satanic majesty's dominions, and they were wont to say in a mysterious whisper: "De debbel 'll git dat ole Fundy yit—allers a diggin' en a diggin', a tryin' tir git deeper 'n deeper. He drap t'rough some dese days an' hese'f in hell, sho."

The idea was rather encouraged by the fact that the old man, who seldom had a word to say to anybody when he was above ground, kept up a constant muttering and growling, intermingled with much profanity, when he got a few feet beneath the earth's surface, and the deeper he got the more garrulous and profane he became; which led the superstitious darkies to believe that he held converse with the boss devil himself.

When he had a well to sink he spent a day searching over the ground for a spot that he deemed favorable for the purpose, never adopting the many tricks that well diggers generally resort to to find water, as they say, and while he paced slowly around, stopping now and then and muttering to himself, the negroes, who were watching him from a little distance, would say: "De ole black man (devil) right onder 'im now; he talkin' ter 'im; wonner w'y he don't tell 'im right off whar de bes'ess' water; reckon dey hef ter meke a barg'in fus'."

They didn't dare speak to the old man while he was thus engaged, and when he had selected a spot suitable for his purpose, he would mark it with a stake and go away, and then they would go and lay their ears on the ground and fancy they could hear the sound of rushing water fifty or sixty feet below.

"Umph!" they would say, "de debble he know all 'bout it, en he tell 'im w'en he done meke 'im sw'ar somep'n—dat wa't it is. De debbel belong ter dat ole Fundy now, but bimeby he belong ter de debbel, fur sho."

Exactly three days later the well digger would return at daybreak and begin work, marking off a square and setting to with pick and spade as if he were going to penetrate the very center of the globe.

This exact period of three days intervening between the choice of ground and the beginning of labor was another cause of superstitious conjecture among the negroes.

"Dat wus part uv de bargin. Ef he bergin any sooner ur any later somep'n gwine ter happ'n ter 'im. Dat de reason he wus blowed up onct—he din'a' keep ter de bargin."

Fundy would work away by himself, grumbling and growling as he went down, until he got too deep to throw out the soil with his spade, and then he would rig his windlass and accompanying rope and tub, and some man belonging to the place where he was working would assist him.

He had sunk a well on the plantation of a gentleman living some miles from A——. Forty feet down he had struck a vein of good water, and was preparing to begin the curbing, the bricks used for that purpose lying about in piles among the heaps of clay, stone and other debris that had been hauled up in the tub.

The negro who was assisting him came, as usual, a little after dawn, and was surprised to find that the old man was not there.

"I wonner whar dat ole Fundy dis mornin'?" he said, looking around. "W'at dat?" His ears had caught a peculiar sound coming, apparently, from the well, and he went and leaned over it, placing his hands on the windlass to support himself. After a few minutes' listening, "My gawdermighty!" he exclaimed, "de debbel done got 'im dis time, sho!" and then he ran off to the negro quarters, whence in a little while he returned, accompanied by a dozen or more other negroes, all talking vehemently.

"I tell yer de debbel done got 'im," said he who had made the discovery; "I heered 'um down dar jis' a-fightin'. Ole Fundy was a cussin' en de debbel wus jis' a-sayin' bah—bah—bah."

"How yer know de debbel talk dat away?" asked one of his comrades.

"'Caze I knows he does; ain't he got horns en huffs?"

That seemed to settle the question, and they all approached the well, some of them leaning over it.

"You hear dat!" said the same speaker; "jis' list'n! Did anybody uver hear sich cussin'? En' jis' list'n ter de debbel. He don' kier nuttin' 'bout he cussin'; reckin he like 'um—meke 'um tote easy."

"My bruthrin," said one of the darkies, who was a sort of preacher, "how of'n hes I tol' yer yer better putt a bridle on yer tongue ur a halter 'round yer neck w'en I'se heard yer a takin' ther Lawd's name in vain. Now tuck warnin' by dis here sample—dis here ole nigh, w'at's de orfullest cussin' man es uver was. De debbel done got 'im now, en he'll git all on yer sometime dags, sho's yer born' serpent there on yer ways."

An answer as prolonged cry of distress came from the bottom of the well.

"Durn it!" said the negro who had brought the others there, "I b'lieve ole Fundy gwine ter whip de debbel dis time."

"Dar yer go, Br'er Isam," said the preacher, "a cussin' an' a sw'arin' at sich a time es dis, w'en de farder uv hes an' cussin's a druggin' a sinful mortul down ter hell. He'll come arter you nex' time, Br'er Isam—I don' 'spec' nuthin' else."

"I wun't a cussin', Br'er Jim," said Isam. "I jis' said durn it, en' dat ain't cussin'."

"W'at is it, den, ef 'tain't cussin'?"

"I dunno," said Isam, "but 'taint cussin', I knows dat."

"Well, go on, go on," said the preacher; "go on an' see w'at Sat'n 'll call it w'en he come to git yer; ef 'tain't cussin' it's foolishness, en' dat's jes' es bad."

In the meantime the noise at the bottom of the well had ceased and the negroes stood in silent awe listening intently.

"Dey's gone," said one under his breath; "de debbel done drug 'm down wid 'im."

"O, my bruthrin," said the preacher, "ain't yer gwine ter tuck warnin' by dis here sample! How does yer know but some on yer'll be called ter follow 'im', en' den whar'll yer be—whar I say? Does yer know? No, yer don't. But I does. Yer'll be whar ther fire ain't nuver squinched; whar yer'll heve ter eat brimstone en' drink bilin' pitch; yer'll be in ther claws uv satan en' he'll tramp on yer wid 'is huffs, en' he'll butt yer wid 'is horns, en' he'll pitch yer wid 'is pitchfo'k. Yes, my bruthrin, yer kin cuss den, en' de mo' yer cuss de better he'll like it en' de mo' he'll laugh. Ain't yer gwine ter stop dis lyin' en' cussin' en' stealin' 'fo' it's too late?"

"Wat dat yer says 'bout stealin', Br'er Jim?" said Isam. "Who b'en a-stealin'?"

"Don't yer know, Br'er Isam?" asked Jim sarcastically. "Who was it went inter ole masser's million patch en tuck 'is watermillions?"

"I dunno who tuck um," said Isam; "but who eat um? tell me dat."

"Dat's anudder ting," replied Jim. "Ef a man steal a hoss, is it furbid dat I shill ride 'im?"

"I dunno 'bout dat," said Isam; "but ef de man w'at dat hoss b'long ter fin' yer on he back I reckin he gwin tell yer somep'n 'bout it."

"Ugh!" ejaculated Jim just here—his face was turned toward the well—"w'at de debbel dat?"

His little congregation looked round to see what it was that seemed to have frightened Jim.

"My gawdermighty!" cried Isam; "ole Fundy done fowt de debbel en' whip'im," and then the negroes all ran away, scattering in every direction.

Old Fundy's head and shoulders appeared just above the surface of the ground, he having climbed up by the rope attached to the windlass. His hands were covered with blood, of which there were glouts on his grim, weather beaten face and his flannel shirt. Climbing high enough to step on to the solid earth he limped to a pile of bricks and sat down, rubbing his legs, muttering curses to himself. By and by he got up, and picking up a piece of rope lying near, wound it around his body and descended into the well, from which, after a little while, he emerged again and began to turn the windlass. It seemed to task his strength somewhat to wind the rope up, as if there were a heavy burden attached to it, but in time the big dirt tub appeared, and in it, tied tightly, lest it should fall out, was a goat—a big billy goat, only half of which was in the tub, the hind quarters hanging over the side. Holding the windlass with one hand while he landed his load with the other, the old well digger, with a few imprecations scarce meet for ears polite, proceeded to unfasten the carcass and drag it out of the way, after which he sat down to recover his breath.

The old man had come at daybreak to his work, and while awaiting the arrival of his assistant, Isam, had busied himself selecting bricks for the first corners of the curbing. He then examined the windlass and its appurtenances to see that the constant friction had done no damage, for a load of bricks on a man's head is no pleasant reminder of his own carelessness. There was an old billy goat roving about the lot, a veteran with the beard of a prophet, but Fundy hadn't noticed him, and while he was stooping over making the knot that attached the tub to the rope more secure the goat, as if curious to see what he was about, had come close up behind him. Whether he suddenly took it into his head that the old man, who in that position appeared to be a quadruped, was another goat, or whether he was moved by the natural desire to butt when there was a fair target to butt at, it is impossible to decide, but certain it is his "rambunksious" instincts brought him up on his hind legs in a belligerent attitude, from which he came down with a vim that sent the old man down to the bottom of the well. Fortunately Fundy landed on his feet, he having, with that impulse which prompts us to grasp anything within reach to save ourselves, caught the rope and gone down clinging to it, the tub pressed out in front of him and dragging against the side of the well, acting as a break.

But he had hardly reached the end of his rapid downward journey when his assailant, like that famous heroine of Mother Goose memory, came tumbling after; for the impetus of the blow had carried the giver as well as the receiver into the trap, as frequently happens in more important affairs.

The water in the well was not as yet very deep, and standing in it he and the old goat fought it out—old Fundy, with the aid of a clasp knife that he had in his pocket, coming out victorious.—Robert Boggs in Times-Democrat.

"How much for that pair of pants?" he

"Only two dollar, my frendt."

The stranger felt in the right hand pocket, gave a start of surprise and continued:

"Everything goes with the pants, I suppose?"

"Say, old man, will you take $4 for these pants?"

"I—I—what vhas in dat pocket?"

"Will you take $3? Come, now, business is business."

"My frendt, I vhas sorry to tell you dot I had made a great mistake. Dose pants vhas put out by accident."

"Say $1, then."

"Dey vhas my own Sounday pants, and of course I can't sell 'em. Please keep your hands off."

"Say, I'll give you $7! Seven big dollars."

"No, no! Get go of dose pants! You be lief I vhas such a fool dot I sell my own clothes off my back?"

"Say, ten, then! that's a good feller—say ten!"

"Not by a shug, full! It vhas a principle with me that I shall sell my clothes off dese pants up to me or I calls de police!"

"Well, take 'em, old Injun! You'll be sorry for this!"

While the man was walking away the clothier turned all the pockets inside out in nervous haste, and the result was nix. His flushed face grew pale and his hair stood up, and he waved the pants high in air and called out:

"Ho! my frendt, come back! It vhas all a mistake some more! Dose pants vhas yours for twelve shilling!"

But the stranger never even turned his head.—Detroit Free Press.

He Did Not Reduce the Bill.

A man who had just set up in the hardware business and who had been a clerk where the eccentric millionaire, Stephen Girard, had been in the habit of trading, applied to him for a share of his patronage. Girard bought of him, but when the bill was sent in he found fault and marked down the prices.

"Cask of nails," he growled, "which I was offered for so and so. You have charged so and so, and you must take it off."

"I cannot do it," said the young merchant.

"But you must do it," roared Girard.

"I cannot and will not," was the final reply.

Girard bolted out, apparently in a rage, but soon after sent a check for the whole bill. The young man began to relent and say to himself: "Perhaps he was offered them at that price, but it is all over now. I am sorry I did not reduce the bill and get it out of him on something else. His trade would have been worth a good deal to me."

By and by Girard came again and gave him another order. The young man was very courteous and said he was almost sorry he did not reduce the former bill.

"Reduce a bill!" exclaimed Girard, "had you done it I would never trade with you again. I merely meant to see if you had cheated me."—Detroit Free Press.

Hardships of a Western Editor.

"Our paper is two days late this week," writes a Nebraska editor, "owing to an accident to our press. When we started to run the edition Wednesday night, as usual, one of the guy ropes gave way, allowing the forward gilder fluke to fall and break as it struck the flunker flopper. This, of course, as any one who knows anything about a press will readily understand, left the gang plank with only a flip flap to support it, which also dropped and broke off the wapper chock. This loosened the fluking from between the ramrod and the flibber snatcher, which also caused trouble. The report that the delay was caused by overindulgence in intoxicating stimulants by ourself is a tissue of falsehoods, the peeled appearance of our right eye being caused by our going into the hatchway of the press in our anxiety to start it, and pulling the coupling pin after the slap bang was broken, which caused the dingus to rise up and welt us in the optic. We expect a brand new gilder fluke on this afternoon's train."—Chicago Tribune.

A Book Agent Who Meant Business.

There is a book agent in this city at the present time who is a genius, a man utterly unlike the rest of his class, a man well equipped with imagination as well as audacity. If his turn for mendacity holds out it will land him in a seat at about the right hand of his satanic majesty. Yesterday this of the largest wholesale grocery houses in this city with a couple of books under his arm neatly wrapped up in brown paper. He was handsomely dressed in a style which was buggy enough to be termed "quite English, you know," and, seriously speaking, there was a decorous suavity in his gait which was almost clerical. He traversed the big office and stopped at the desk of one of the principal members of the firm. The latter looked up as the stranger approached, and, being a man of keen perception, diagnosed the case correctly. He said: "Another —— book agent; I don't want any books; I'm busy."

"I am no book agent," said the stranger, calmly, as he pulled a chair up close to the merchant's desk. "I am the representative of the London publishing firm of Black & Son. I was sent here to introduce their publications to the leading citizens of the United States. I was told by Mr. Westinghouse that you were a leading citizen and"——

"I don't want any books, I tell you," broke in the merchant.

"I don't want to sell any books. I want you and others to know who Black & Son are. I communicate the results of my tour by cable to my employers; they telegraph me my salary as I go, week by week; even my hotel bills are settled by cable. Now you are a leading citizen and your time is valuable; very well, I will pay you $5 for five minutes of your time," and the speaker put his hand in his pocket and drew out a wallet from which he took a greenback. The merchant caught hold of his chair and simply gasped. Then his captor went on: "I have here a copy of Victor Hugo's 'Les Miserables,' one of a set of the great French author's works, and I will show you"——

"No, you won't! Just tell me what the set's worth," said the victim.

"Just $32."

The merchant wrote a check for the amount, handed it to the agent and said, "Now, go."

The agent went, and the man whom he had conquered fell back in his chair murmuring, "Salary by cable, expenses by cable, $5 for five minutes—well, I'll be ——."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

How He Caught His Train.

Conductor Pierce, of the Rock Island suburban service, tells a story about a passenger he had one recent morning. "It was not much after daylight," said the popular conductor, "as we stopped for the Fort Wayne crossing in Englewood, on my first morning run to the city. Imagine my surprise, just as the train pulled out, to see a man come running out of one of the back yards next to the track, clad only in his underclothes, and holding in his arms a bundle of clothing. He boarded the train, creating, as you might imagine, a good deal of a sensation among the young lady passengers; but he passed as quickly as he could into the smoking car and there finished his dressing. You see, the man had failed to awake as early as he had planned to do, and as he had to take my train into the city in order to catch a train out on another road, and as very important business of his employer would have suffered had he not done so, he very wisely concluded to jump out of bed, grab up his clothes in his arms and make a run for it."—Chicago Herald.

The Making of Him.

Omaha Man (on railroad train)—No; I am not traveling on business, exactly. I am going east after my son. He is in a college there and was hurt recently in a game of football. I shall take him out. I don't believe in these eastern colleges anyhow; all play and no work.

Stranger—Well, I do. I am a college graduate, and I owe my present success to my collegiate training. I just tell you football toughens a man up wonderfully. The knocking around I got in college was the making of me.

"Humph! What business are you in?"

"I am a book agent."—Omaha World.

The Emoluments of Literature.

First New Yorker—Who is that shabby looking man you just bowed to?

Second New Yorker—Oh, that's an author who stuck to pure literature—said he would starve before he would write down to the masses.

"Ah, too bad! And who is that gorgeous looking swell who is crossing the street?"

"That is the soap and arsenic poet—writes most of the rhyming advertisements that you see in the papers."—New York Tribune.

She Gets There Nicely.

Young Mr. Waldo (of Boston)—It is a great pleasure to me, Miss Breezy, when away from home, to meet with one whose tastes and ideas regarding literature and art are similar to mine, who can offer intelligent sympathy, as it were, in all that tends to exalt and embellish the refining influences of life.

Miss Breezy (of Chicago)—Oh, thanks, you are very kind, I am sure; and I think myself, Mr. Waldo, that I tumble to anything of that sort very quickly.—New York Sun.

BILL NYE ON COPYRIGHT.

He Receives a Few Letters on the Subject from Literary Lights.

COME time ago, in order to ascertain leading lights in literature and other walks of life, I wrote to a large number of promi- [illegible] the following questions:

First—Who is your favorite prose writer?

Second—Who is your favorite verse writer?

Third—What hair restorer has helped you most?

Fourth—What is your opinion of international copyright?

Fifth—Have you five or four dollars at hand which you are not using?

Sixth—What is your opinion of capital punishment?

Seventh—What would you do with raspberry jelly that will not jelly?

Most of these questions so far have been ignored, but a number of answers have already arrived, and I have collected those which bear mostly on the question of international copyright. I do not say that they seriously attempt to cover the ground, but these letters show how intensely every one has been aroused both here and abroad.

Mr. Swinburne, in answer to the letter referred to above, says briefly but tersely:

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your circular letter in which you ask me who my favorite prose and verse writers are, also my opinion of the international copyright matter, what books have helped me most and what best to do in my opinion with jelly that will not jell.

Postponing my answers for the present in so far as they relate to the other queries, I will say that I think a better arrangement for international protection to authors between English speaking countries is necessary, paramount and all pervading. The Americans, I understand, read my poems behind the barn, refuse to pay me a royalty on them and then, to heap additional shame and obloquy upon me, they name their domestic animals after me. I had always believed the Americans to be a wild and hairy, but generous race. I was taught to regard them as a people who wore their trousers and stab knives in their bootlegs, but loved to see fair play; but when I am chiseled out of my ready kopecks, and unscrupulous publishers on this side stand in with American hustlers to cable my bran new tragedy across the Atlantic before I can sign it and turn around to spit, and then emphasize their bloody insult by christening a Percheron horse in Illinois with my name in full, I say that literature is at a low ebb in your country.

You are all eagle screams and Fourth of July and starry banner free and blooming brag, by Jove! and no cider. I sometimes wish that I had been born with just barely brains enough for my own use. You cannot really understand how it exhausts one to jerk the lyre for all creation and not get half paid for it.

BEHIND THE BARN.

But some day the coarse and greedy American will wake up and demand a poem that shall be soaked full of a sad, musical and rhythmical violation of the statutes in such case made and provided, and he will ask for the use of my four horse teeming brain, but it will be stilled forever. Then he will be sorry and will come and whittle off pieces of my fence to remember me by, and go down into my wine cellar and sob and say that England and the world have met with a great loss, and he will be right about it. You hear me,

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

Gen. Boulanger cables:

SIR: Will you pardon me to try and cablegram you in yours own language of what I shall say to you? I am the author of what you should nominate "Boulanger's March," which I am to understand is what you should designate in your country one grand crazy. Is it not so?

To my ears it comes every little frequently, as you say, that to hear anything else musical in America but "Boulanger's March" and "What the Little Dickey Birds Remark" is unpossible.

Yet I get nothing for all those but to have my portrait translated into broken English, as you say, and published in the papers. Cannot your paper assist in one grand difficulty which shall result in a law that shall make the author or the criminal, both together, reap the rewards of his acts, and so wherever he shall go to, whether India's icy mountains or Greenland's coral strands, as some one has said, he shall not escape, but be rewarded or punished so much in one country as the other, whether he shall steal a bank nationale or write a poem?

Then should I get a small sum when my march is sold along what we shall call the Rue de Park row. Then shall I rejoicement first rate when everybody shall whistle it or play it or sing it. I now close up this letter with a small remark, and it is this: When you shall expect to have great authors, or send good men to foreign countries to represent our grand country, do not economize too much. Pardon me to write you a mean thing, but it will take a century to make your literature and your foreign ministry grow up so that they shall fit your great financial embarrassments.

I will now excuse you and say so long, with my love to the presiding officer of your country, whose name I do not now recall.

I hope you will put your shoulder to the wheel and aid us all you can.

There are a number of other letters yet to hear from, especially from the crowned heads, but I still hope to get replies from many of them. Several royal families at present are away from home and have left no word about having their mail forwarded to them, so it may be weeks before I get a full expression from our brainiest monarchs.

In the mean time, under present regulations, the American author courteously asks congress to give him as good a show in America as M. Zola now has.—Bill Nye in New York World.

That's His Business

Sullivan seems to have made quite a hit in England.—Yonkers Gazette.

STORIES OF MEN.

A Liberal Offer Made to a Celebrated Editor.

Mrs. Storey, widow of the celebrated editor, delights to tell of an incident which occurred [illegible] Storey. A friend of the editor of The Times was running for office. Of course Storey helped him out. The paper contained a few editorial paragraphs praising the candidate, but what pleased the gentleman most was the handsome reports of the speeches which appeared in the city columns. According to the reports in The Times, the candidate was an eloquent orator who nightly stirred the passions and won the applause of his hearers. The candidate felt very grateful to The Times people for their kindness, and one evening when he was in the office to see Storey the thought occurred to him that it would be a good thing to tender the reporters, who had done such wonderful things for his speeches, some token of his appreciation. So he marched into the managing editor's room—Chamberlain was managing editor at the time—and said to that gentleman:

"Mr. Chamberlain, I want to make a little present to the reporters of your staff. I suppose you have no objections?"

"Never mind that," replied Mr. Chamberlain; "it's not necessary, and I'm afraid that Mr. Storey wouldn't like it."

"But the reporters have really done very nicely by me, Mr. Chamberlain, and I want to make them feel that I appreciate their kindness. Here's a $10 note. I wish you would take it, Mr. Chamberlain, and divide it among the reporters with my compliments."

"Oh, that won't do," remonstrated the editor, "and you must really put away your money or Mr. Storey will be sure to get angry about it."

So the candidate folded up his $10 note, quite unable to understand why it had been declined. Of course, Editor Chamberlain had to turn his head in order to avoid laughing the candidate in the face, and in speaking of the incident afterward, Mr. Chamberlain said:

"We had twenty-four reporters at that time, and the $10 would have given them just 41 2-3 cents each!"

How Wolverton Became a Lord.

The late Lord Wolverton was a famous sportsman and an inveterate theatregoer with a special fondness for French comedies. It is told that his first intimation that he was to become a peer came to him one day when in attendance on Mr. Gladstone and Lord Granville at the treasury upon the occasion of their drawing up their first list of "honors" for submission to the queen. In the middle of the conference Lord Granville said to him in rather a shy voice: "Glyn, would you mind leaving me and Gladstone alone for a minute? We want to confer alone." Glyn, rather surprised, retired in an undignified manner to the passage. After a brief space Lord Granville called him in again, and then Mr. Gladstone, looking at him with great dignity and severity, asked him if he thought his father would like to be a peer. Glyn laughed, and declared that he supposed such an idea had never entered the old gentleman's head, but that he would like, above all things, to have the peerage in his turn, and that, therefore, he would accept on his behalf. The elder Glyn was accordingly ennobled, much to his own bewilderment.—New York Tribune.

Forgot His Own Name.

Speaking of loss of memory reminds me of a singular incident in the career of the New York millionaire Peter Hayden. On one occasion he was in the town of Portsmouth, O., attending to some business, and went to the postoffice to see if there were any letters for him.

"Any mail for me?" he inquired of the clerk.

"What name, please?" was the response; but for the life of him the capitalist could not recall it. Going out upon the street he met an acquaintance, who greeted him, saying: "How are you today, Mr. Hayden?" "That's it," was the rejoinder of the New Yorker, and then explaining his strange demeanor to his friend he hurried back into the postoffice and gave the required information to the clerk.

That was an actual occurrence, and no one enjoyed the joke afterward better than the victim.—St. Paul Globe.

Prince Bismarck's Son.

Prince Bismarck had just seated himself for dinner and placed his spoon into the soup to begin eating the other day when a telegram from Berlin was handed to him. "The message requires an immediate reply," said he, excusing himself to his guests. "But your soup will get cold," suggested one of them. "It is better it should get cold than that Herbert should grow hot," replied the prince, jocosely, referring to his son, the sender of the message. "He is so diligent about his work," continued the prince, "that if I do not reply right away he will send me another telegram in a few minutes much more urgent than this. He is a stunner at his work, I tell you. Had I been like him when a boy I should have been a very different man."—Chicago News.

Thomas Nast's Good Advice.

When Thomas Nast was in Kansas City recently, he was annoyed by the rudeness of the elevator boys, and said as much. On a lat[illegible] was all politeness, and as[illegible] his unique autograph. Mr. [illegible] a hasty pen and ink ske[illegible] bowing deferentially to the elevator boy, and wrote under the drawing: "Those who elevate others must be polite themselves." The boy learned a lesson.—New York Sun.

Evarts' Remark on Justice Clifford.

Looking the other day at a portrait of the late Justice Clifford, in which the jurist's characteristic huge neckcloth was faithfully portrayed, "The last time I saw Clifford," said Senator Evarts, "was when I was making my argument before the electoral commission. Right in the middle of it I looked up at him, and could not help saying to myself: 'Mens conscia necktie.'"—New York Tribune.

Why Oscar Felt Sad.

F. Marion Crawford tells this story of Oscar Wilde: "Wilde," says he, "came into my study one day and sat down at a table, leaning his head heavily on his hand, and said: 'Ah! Crawford, Crawford, I am feeling very sad to-night. One half of the world does not believe in God and the other half does not believe in me.'"—Detroit Free Press.

Righteous Indignation.

"Coming down town yesterday," said a passenger on a street car to a companion, "I escaped paying my fare. I had it ready for the conductor, but as he didn't ask me for it I didn't feel compelled to give it to him."

Just then the conductor said, "Fare, please."

"Why, I gave you a nickel when I got on," declared the passenger.

"So you did; I beg your pardon, sir."

Then the passenger said to his friend, with indignation, "It's an outrage to be asked twice for fare. I've a mind to report the fellow."—Harper's Bazar.

THE ANNUAL MESSAGE.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S COMMUNI-

The Treasury Surplus and the Tariff Question Its Sole

The Country's Financial Prosperity Threatened by the Accumulation in the Vaults of the Treasury.

The Present System of Taxation Declared to Be the Cause of the Surplus, and a Thorough Revision of the Tariff the Only Remedy—Home Consumers, And Manufacturers To Be Benefitted by a Reduction of Certain Import Duties—An Argument from the Wool Growing Business.

[illegible] the annual message to Congress [illegible] day. It treats solely of the Treasury surplus and tariff question, and is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

You are confronted at the threshhold of your legislative duties with a condition of the national finances which imperatively demands immediate and careful consideration. The amount of money annually received through the operation of present laws, from the industries and necessities of the people, largely exceeds the sum necessary to meet the expenses of the government. When we consider that the theory of our institutions guarantees to every citizen the full endowment of the fruits of his industry and enterprises with only such deduction as may be his share toward the careful and economical maintenance of the government which protects him it is plain that the exaction of more than this is indefensible and a culpable betrayal of fairness and justice. This wrong inflicted upon those who bear the burden of national taxation, like other wrongs, multiplies a brood of evil consequences. The public treasury, which should only exist as a conduit conveying the people's tribute to its legitimate objects of expenditures, becomes a hoarding place for money needlessly withdrawn from trade and the people's use, thus crippling our national energies, usurping our country's development, preventing investment in productive enterprises, threatening financial disturbance, and inviting schemes of public plunder.

This condition of our treasury is not altogether new; and it has more than once of late been submitted to the people's representatives in the congress who alone can apply a remedy. And yet the situation still continues, with aggravated incidents, more than ever presaging financial convulsions and wide-spread disaster. It will not do to neglect this situation because its dangers are not now palpably imminent and apparent. They exist none the less certainly and the unforseen and unexpected occasion may come when suddenly they will be precipitated upon us.

On the 30th day of June 1885, the excess of revenue over public expenditure after complying with the annual requirement of the sinking fund act, was $17,826,735.84; during the year ended June 30, 1886, such excess amounted to $49,405,545.20; and during the year ended June 30, 1887, it reached the sum of $55,567,519.54. The annual contributions to the sinking-fund during the three years above specified, amounting in the aggregate to $138,798,920.94, and deducting from the surplus as stated, were made by calling in for that purpose outstanding 3 per cent. bonds of the government. During the six months prior to June 30, 1887, the surplus revenue had grown so large by repeated accumulations, and it was feared the withdrawal of this great sum of money needed by the people would so affect the business of the country that the sum of $79,324,100 of such surplus was applied to the payment of the principal and interest of the 3 per cent. bonds still outstanding, and which were then payable at the option of the government. The precarious condition of financial affairs among the people still needed relief immediately after the 30th day of June, 1887, the remainder of the 3 per cent. bonds thus outstanding amounting with principal and interest, to the sum of $15,977,200, were called in and applied to the sinking fund contribution for the current fiscal year. Notwithstanding these operations of the treasury department representations of distress in business circles not only continued but increased, and absolute peril seemed at hand. In these circumstances the contribution to the sinking fund for the current fiscal year was at once completed by the expenditure of $27,684,283.55 in the purchase of government bonds not yet due bearing 4½ per cent interest, the premium paid thereon averaging about 24 per cent. for the former and 8 per cent. for the latter. In addition to this the interest accruing during the current year upon the outstanding bonded indebtedness of the government was to some extent anticipated and banks selected as depositories of public money were permitted to somewhat increase their deposits.

While the expedients thus employed, to release to the people the money lying in the treasury, served to avert immediate danger, our surplus revenue have continued to accumulate, the excess for the present year amounting on the 1st day of December to $55,258,871.19, and estimated to reach the sum of $118,000,000 on the 30th of June next, at which date it is expected that this sum, added to prior accumulations, will swell the surplus in the treasury to $140,000,000.

There seems to be no assurance that with such a withdrawal from use of the people's circulating medium our business community may not in the near future be subjected to the same distress which was quite lately produced from the same cause. And while the functions of our national treasury should be few and simple, and while the best condition would be reached, I believe by its entire disconnection with the private business interests, yet which, by a perversion of its purposes, it idly holds money uselessly subtracted from the channels of trade, there seems to be reasons for the claims that legitimate means should be devised by the government to restore in an emergency, without waste or extravagance, such money to its place among the people.

If such an emergency arises there now exists no clear and undoubted executive power of relief. Heretofore the redemption of the 3 per cents only, which were payable at the option of the government, has afforded a means for the disbursement of the excess of our revenues; but these bonds have all been retired, and there are no bonds outstanding, the payment of which we have the right to insist upon. The contribution to the sinking fund, which furnishes the occasion for expenditures in the purchase of bonds, has been already made for the current year, so there is no outlet in that direction.

In the present state of legislation the only pretense of any existing executive power to restore, at this time, any part of our surplus revenues to the people by its expenditure consists in the supposition that the secretary of the treasury may enter the market and purchase the bonds of the government not yet due, at a rate of premium to be agreed upon.

The only provision of law from which such a power could be derived is found in an appropriation bill passed a number of years ago, and it is subject to the supposition that it was intended as a temporary and limited in its application instead of conferring a continuing discretion and authority. No condition ought to exist which would justify the grant of power to a single official upon his judgment of his necessity, to withhold from or release to business of the people in an unusual manner money held in the treasury, and thus affect, at his will, the financial situation of the country, and if it is deemed wise to lodge in the secretary of the treasury the authority in the present juncture to purchase bonds, it should be plainly vested, and provided as far as possible, with such checks and limitations as will define his official right and discretion and at the same time relieve him from undue responsibility.

In considering the question of purchasing bonds as a means of restoring to circulation the surplus money accumulating in the treasury, it should be borne in mind that premiums must of course be paid upon such purchase; that there may be a large part of these bonds held as investments which can not be purchased at any price and that combinations among holders who are willing to sell, may unreasonably enhance the cost of such bonds to the government.

It has been suggested that the present bonded debt might be refunded at a less rate of interest and the difference between the old and new securities paid in cash, thus finding use for the surplus in the treasury. The success of this plan, it is apparent, must be founded upon the volition of the holders of the present bonds, and it is not entirely certain that the inducement which must be offered them would reduce the principal of the debt by actual payment, instead of extending it. The proposition to deposit the money held by the government in banks throughout the country, for use by the people, is, it seems to me, an exceedingly objectionable principle as reaching too close a relationship between the operations of the government to the business of the country, and the extensive commingling of their money, thus fostering an unnatural reliance in private business upon public funds. If this scheme should be adopted it should be done as a temporary expedient to meet an urgent necessity. Legislative and executive effort should generally be in the opposite direction and should have a tendency to divorce, as much and as fast as can be done the treasury department from private enterprises. Of course it is not expected that unnecessary and extravagant operations will be made for the purpose of avoiding the application of the surplus revenue. [illegible] the best convenient with the [illegible] ple or the high behoof of [illegible]

[illegible] knowledge of my conclusions, as well as the [illegible] of the [illegible] duty of legislation [illegible] financial situation [illegible] It was [illegible] [illegible] which caused [illegible] [illegible] from the southern [illegible] [illegible] with [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] protective features of [illegible] the people [illegible] to the country, [illegible] by a [illegible] of a [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] expenditure [illegible] [illegible] national treasury and [illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] stated that [illegible] [illegible] a remedy so [illegible] [illegible] a provision in the future [illegible] the cause.

[illegible] taxation by means of which the [illegible] surplus is taken from the people and [illegible] the public treasury is a mistake of a tariff [illegible] upon imported articles from which [illegible] [illegible] of American [illegible] [illegible] taxes relating to the [illegible] of internal revenue taxation are [illegible] necessary, and it appears to be [illegible] cause of complaint of the consumers of the articles, and there seems to be nothing so well adapted to bear the burden without hardship to any portion of the people.

But our present tariff laws, the various, inequitable and illogical source of unnecessary taxation, ought to be at once revised and amended. These laws, as their primary and plain effect, raise the price to consumers of all articles imported and subject to duty, by precisely the sum paid for such duties. Thus the amount of the duty measures the tax paid by those who purchase for use these imported articles. Many of these things, however, are raised or manufactured in our own country, and the duties now levied upon foreign goods and products are called protection to these home manufactures, because they render it possible for those of our people who are manufacturers to make these taxed articles and sell them for a price equal to that demanded for the imported goods that have paid customs duty. So it happens that while comparatively a few use the imported article, millions of our people, who never use and never saw any of the foreign products, purchase and use things of the same kind made in this country, and pay therefore nearly or quite the same enhanced price which the duty adds to the imported articles. Those who buy imports pay the duty charged thereon into the public treasury, but the great majority of our citizens who buy domestic articles of the same class pay a sum at least approximately equal to its duty to the home manufacturers. This reference to the operation of our tariff laws is not made by way of instruction, but in order that we may be constantly reminded of the manner in which they impose a burden upon those who consume domestic products as well as those who consume imported articles, and thus create a tax upon all our people.

It is not proposed to entirely relieve the country of this taxation. It must be extensively continued as the source of the government's income; and in a readjustment of our tariff the interests of American labor engaged in manufacturing should be carefully considered, as well as the preservation of our manufacturers. It may be called protection, or by any other name, but relief from the hardships and dangers of our present tariff laws, should be devised with especial precaution against imperiling the existence of our manufacturing interests. But this existence should not mean a condition which, without regard to the public welfare or a national exigency, must always insure the realization of immense profits instead of moderate profit. As the volume and diversity of our national activities increase, new recruits are added to those who desire a continuation of the advantages which they conceive the present system of tariff taxation directly affords them. So stubbornly has all efforts to reform the present condition been resisted by those of our fellow-citizens thus enriched, that they can hardly conceal the suspicion entertained to a certain extent, that there exists an organized combination all along the line to maintain their advantage.

We are in the midst of centennial celebrations and with becoming pride we rejoice in American skill and ingenuity, in American energy and enterprise, and in the wonderful natural advantages and resources developed by a century's national growth. Yet when an attempt is made to justify a scheme which permits a tax to be laid upon every consumer in the land for the benefit of our manufacturers quite beyond a reasonable demand for governmental regard, it suits the purposes of the manufacturers and infant industries still needing the highest and greatest degree of favor and care that can be wrung from federal legislation. It is also said that the increase in the price of domestic manufactures resulting from the present tariff is necessary in order that higher wages may be paid than for what is called pauper labor in Europe. In all we acknowledge the force of an argument which involves the welfare and diverse occupation of our laboring people. Our labor is honorable in the eyes of every American citizen, and lies at the foundation of our development; it is entitled without affectation or hypocrisy to the utmost regard. The standard of our laborer's life should not be marred by that of another country less favored, and they are entitled to their full share of our advantages.

By the last census it is made to appear that of the 17,392,099 of our population engaged in all kinds of industries 7,670,493 are employed in agriculture, 4,074,238 in professional and personal services, 2,396,876 of whom are domestic servants and laborers, while 1,810,256 are employed in trade and transportation, and 3,397,112 are classed as employed in manufacturing and mining. For present purposes however, the latter number should be considerably reduced. Without attempting to enumerate, it can be conceded that there should be deducted from those which it includes 375,143 carpenters and joiners, 255,170 milliners, dress makers and seamstresses, 172,129 blacksmiths, 154,756 tailors and tailoresses, 107,666 miners, 77,941 butchers, 41,939 bakers, 22,182 plasterers and 4801 manufacturing agricultural implements, leaving 2,623,389 persons employed in manufacturing industries as are claimed to be benefitted in a high tariff.

To these the appeal is made to save their employment and maintain their wages by resisting a change. There should be no disposition to answer such suggestions by the suggestion that they are in a minority among those who labor, and therefore should forego an advantage in the interest of low prices for the majority. Their compensation, as it may be affected by the operations of tariff laws, should at all times be scrupulously kept in view, and yet with slight reflections they will not overlook the fact that they are consumers with the rest; that they have their own wants and those of their families to satisfy from their earnings, and that the prices of the necessaries of life as well as the number of those wants will regulate the measure of their welfare and comfort. But the question of taxation thus mandated at odd be one measure not to exasperate or justify labor, the loss of employment by the workingman or the lessening of his wages, since the profits still remaining to the employer after such a necessary readjustment should furnish no excuse for the sacrifice of the interests of his employees in either their opportunity to work or the diminution of their compensation. Nor can the worker in manufactures understand that while a high tariff is claimed to be necessary to allow payment of remunerative wages, it certainly results in a very large increase to the prices of many articles of manufacture, which, in one shape or another, he needs for the use of himself and his family. He receives at the close of the campaign his wages, and perhaps before he reaches his home is obliged to a purchase at the family store an article which embraces enough money to return in the payment of the increasing price which the tariff permits, the hard earned compensation of many days of toil.

The farmer and the agriculturist who manufactures nothing, but who pay the increased price which the tariff imposes upon every agricultural implement, upon all he wears, and upon all he uses and owns except the increase of his flocks and herds and such things as his husbandry produces from the soil, is invited to aid in maintaining the present situation, and he is told that a high duty on imported wool is necessary for the benefit of those who have sheep to shear, in order that the price of their wool may be increased. They, of course are not reminded that the farmer who has no sheep is by this scheme obliged, in his purchases of clothing and woolen goods, to pay a tribute to his fellow-farmer as well as to the manufacturer and merchant; nor is any mention made of the fact that the sheep owners themselves and their households, must wear clothing and use other articles manufactured from the wool they sell at tariff prices, and thus as consumers, must return their share of this increased price to the tradesman. I think it may be fairly assumed that a large proportion of the sheep owned by the farmers throughout the country are found in small flocks numbering from twenty-five to fifty. The duty on this grade of imported wool which these sheep yield is 16 cents on each pound if of the value of 30 cents or less, and 12 cents if of the value of more than 30 cents. If the liberal estimate of six pounds be allowed for each fleece, the duty thereon would be 60 or 72 cents, and this may be taken as the utmost enhancement of its price to the farmer by reason of this duty. Eighteen dollars would thus represent the increased price of the wool from twenty-five sheep and $36 that from the wool of fifty sheep; and at present values this addition would amount to about one-third of its price. If upon its sale the farmer receives this or a less tariff profit, the wool leaves his hands charged with [illegible] adhere to it, until it reaches the consumer. When manufactured into cloth and other goods and material for use, its cost is not only increased to the extent of the farmers' tariff profit, but a further sum has been added for the benefit of the manufacturer under the operation of other tariff laws.

farmer finds it necessary to purchase woolen goods for material to clothe himself and family for the winter. When he faces the tradesman for that purpose, he discovers that he is obliged not only to return in the why of increased prices, his tariff profit on the wool he sold, and which then perhaps lies before him in manufactured form, but that he must add a considerable sum thereto to meet a further increase in cost caused by a tariff duty on the manufacture. Then in the end, he is aroused to the fact that he has paid up on a moderate purchase, as a result of the tariff scheme, which, when he sold his wool seemed so profitable, an increase in price more than sufficient to sweep away all the tariff profit he received upon the wool he produced and sold.

When the number of farmers engaged in wool raising is compared with all the farmers in the country, and the small proportion they bear to our population is considered, when it is made apparent that, in the case of a large part of those who own sheep, the benefit of the present tariff on wool is illusory, and, above all, when it must be conceded that the increase of the cost of living caused by such tariff, bears a burden upon those with moderate means, and the poor, the employed and the unemployed, the sick and well, and the young and old, and that it constitutes a tax which, with relentless grasp, is fastened upon the clothing of every man, woman, and child in the land, reasons are suggested why the removal or reduction of this duty should be included in a revision of our tariff laws.

In speaking of the increased cost to the consumer of our home manufactures, resulting from a duty laid upon imported articles of the same description, the fact is not overlooked that competition among our domestic producers sometimes has the effect of keeping the price of their products below the highest limit allowed by such duty. But it is notorious that this competition is too often strangled by combinations quite prevalent at this time, and frequently called trusts, which have for their object the regulation of the supply and price of commodities made and sold by members of the combination. The people can hardly hope for any consideration in the operation of these selfish schemers. If, however, in the absence of such combination, a healthy and free competition reduces the price of any particular dutiable article of home production, below the limit which it might otherwise reach under our tariff laws, and if, with such reduced price, its manufacture continues to thrive, it is entirely evident that one thing has been discovered which should be carefully scrutinized in an effort to reduce taxation. The necessity of combination to maintain the price of any commodity o the tariff point furnishes proof that some one is willing to accept lower prices for such commodity, and that such prices are remunerative; and later prices produced by competition prove the same thing. Thus where either of these conditions exist, a case would seem to be presented for an easy reduction of taxation.

The considerations which have been presented touching our tariff laws are intended only to enforce an earnest recommendation that the surplus revenues of the government be prevented by the reduction of our customs duties, and, at the same time, to emphasize a suggestion that in accomplishing this purpose, we may discharge a double duty to our people by granting to them a measure of relief from tariff taxation in quarters where it is most needed, and from sources where it can be most fairly and justly accorded. Nor can the presentation made of such consideration be, with any degree of fairness, regarded as evidence of unfriendliness toward our manufacturing interests, or of any lack of appreciation of their value and importance. These interests constitute a leading and most substantial element of our national greatness and furnish the proud proof of our country's progress. But if in the emergency that presses upon us our manufacturers are asked to surrender something for the public good and to avert disaster, their patriotism, as well as a grateful recognition of advantages already afforded, should lead them to willing co-operation. No demand is made that they shall forego all the benefits of governmental regard; but they cannot fail to be admonished of their duty, as well as their enlightened self-interest and safety, when they are reminded of the fact that financial panic and collapse, to which the present condition tends, afford no greater shelter or protection to our manufactures than to our other important enterprises. Opportunity for safe, careful and deliberate reform is now offered; and none of us should be unmindful of a time when an abused and irritated people, heedless of those who have resisted timely and reasonable relief, may insist upon a radical and sweeping rectification of their wrongs.

The difficulty attending a wise and fair revision of our tariff laws is not under-estimated. It will require on the part of congress great labor and care and especially a broad and national contemplation of the subject, and a patriotic disregard of such local and selfish claims as are unreasonable and reckless of the welfare of the entire country.

Under our present laws more than 4,000 articles are subject to duty. Many of these do not in any way compete with our own manufactures, and many are hardly worth attention as subjects of revenue. A considerable reduction can be made in the aggregate by adding them to the free list. The taxation of luxuries present no features of hardship; but the necessaries of life used and consumed by all the people, the duty upon which adds to the cost of living in every home, should be greatly cheapened. The radical reduction of the duties imposed upon raw material used in manufactures, or its free importation, is, of course, an important factor in any effort to reduce the price of these necessaries; it would not only relieve them from the increased cost caused by the tariff on such material, but the manufactured product being thus cheapened that part of the tariff now laid upon such product, as a compensation to our manufacturers for the present price of raw material, could be accordingly modified. Such reduction, or free importation, would serve besides to largely reduce the revenue. It is not apparent how such a change can have any injurious effect upon our manufactures. On the contrary, it would appear to give them a better chance in foreign markets with the manufacturers of other countries who cheapen their wares by free material. Thus our people might have the opportunity of extending their sales beyond the limits of home consumption, saving them from the depression, interruption in business and loss caused by a glutted domestic market, and affording their employes more certain and steady labor, with its resulting quiet and contentment.

The question thus imperatively presented for solution should be approached in a spirit higher than partisanship, and considered in the light of that regard for patriotic duty which should characterize the action of those intrusted with the weal of a confiding people. But the obligation to declared party policy and principle is not wanting to urge prompt and effective action. Both of the great political parties now represented in the government have, by repeated and authoritative declarations, condemned the condition of our laws which permit the collection from the people of unnecessary revenue, and have, in the most solemn manner, promised us correction; and neither as citizens or partisans are our countrymen in a mood to condone the deliberate violation of these pledges.

Our progress toward a wise conclusion will not be improved by dwelling upon the theories of protection and free trade. This savors too much of bandying epithets. It is a condition which confronts us—not a theory. Relief from this condition may involve a slight reduction of the advantages which we award our home productions, but the entire withdrawal of such advantages should not be contemplated. The question of free trade is absolutely irrelevant and the persistent claims made in certain quarters, that all effort to relieve the people from unjust and unnecessary taxation are schemes of so-called free-traders, is mischievous and far removed from any consideration for the public good. The simple and plain duty which we owe the people is to reduce taxation to the necessary expenses of an economical operation of the government, and to restore to the business of the country the money which we hold in the treasury through the perversion of governmental powers. These things can and should be done with safety to all our industries, without danger to the opportunity for remunerative labor which our working-men need, and with benefit to them and all our people, by cheapening their means of subsistence and increasing the measure of their comforts.

The constitution provides that the president "shall, from time to time, give to the congress information of the state of the Union." It has been the custom of the executive, in compliance with this provision, to annually exhibit to the congress, at the opening of its session, the general condition of the country, and to detail, with some particularity, the operations of the different executive departments. It would be especially agreeable to follow this course at the present time, and to call attention to the valuable accomplishments of these departments during the last fiscal year, but I am so much impressed with the paramount importance of the subject to which this communication has thus far been devoted, that I shall forego the addition of any other topic, and only urge upon your immediate consideration the "state of the Union" as shown in the present condition of our treasury and our general fiscal situation, upon which every element of our safety and prosperity depends.

The reports of the heads of departments, which will be submitted, contain full and explicit information touching the transactions of the business intrusted to them and such recommendations relating to legislation in the public interest as they deem advisable. I ask for these reports and recommendations the deliberate attention of the government.

There are other subjects not embraced in the departmental reports demanding legislative consideration and which I should be glad to submit. Some of them, however, have been earnestly presented in previous messages, and as to them, I beg leave to repeat prior recommendations. As the law makes no provision for any report from the department of state, a brief history of the transactions of that important department, together with other matters which it may hereafter be deemed essential to commend to the attention of the congress, may furnish the occasion for a future communication.

SHOWING UP A FRAUD.

Grape Swindlers in Missouri Run to Earth—Many Farmers Victimized.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Dec. 7.—The Southwestern Grape and Seed company, doing business for the past two years at Springfield, Mo., is accused of obtaining money under false pretenses, and is being prosecuted under the act. It is charged with the famous Bohemian oats swindle, that was so successfully practiced in Ohio two years ago. The swindle consists in selling ten bushels of oats at $15 per bushel to a well-known farmer, taking his note payable at the time of the harvest of his first crop, and making a contract with him to buy all the oats he raises at $10 a bushel. The first year his contract is carried out faithfully, and the honest farmer is made the tool and his neighbors are led to the slaughter. They buy the oats under similar contracts, giving their notes, which are easily discounted.

The Bohemian company had been established a year, and appeared to be reliable, but by the time the contracts of the second year matured the company had migrated. It is estimated that it sold $100,000 worth of seed in Green and adjoining counties in Missouri, and one Springfield bank holds $17,000 of the farmers' notes. Hon. H. G. Mullings, a well-known farmer of Green county, attempted to warn his neighbors by an open letter to the local papers, and was immediately answered by twenty equally well-known farmers who declared that there was no swindle. The Bohemian company appeared to have the advantage, but Mullings continued to peg away and John H. Bennett, a farmer, was arrested Monday on an indictment found by the grand jury. The officers of the company left the city some time ago, and it is believed that they have been indicted. The officers are J. T. Stoner of Grand Island, Neb., and S. S. Cox, of Bryan, Ohio.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT.

Five Men Crushed Under a Falling Derrick—Three Killed.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 7.—A shocking accident occurred Tuesday forenoon at the coal dump of the Reading Railroad company, at Richmond and Somerset streets, in Port Richmond, this city. The coal dump is a large area, with tracks running into and a large movable derrick. This derrick consists mainly of a great pole eighty feet and about twenty inches in diameter, and is supported by guys. One of these snapped and the great beam toppled over with a crash. In its path were five men and they were smashed and ground by the huge timber as it came down. Three of them were instantly killed and two others fatally injured. The names of the killed are: John Kerrigan, Edward Brown, and John Morley. Peter Trainer and another man whose name was not learned are believed to be fatally injured.

A Maniac Hoosier's Bloody Deed.

RICHMOND, Ind., Dec. 7.—Some days ago a terrible tragedy was enacted in Jonesville, Lee county, this state. It seems that Mr. Frank M. Phillips, a prominent citizen of the place, had been in ill-health for some time, and on Nov. 20 he gave unmistakable evidence of insanity. It was not considered anything serious, however. The next morning he arose early, seized a stick and struck his wife who was yet in bed a heavy blow which almost knocked her senseless. She soon recovered herself, and attempted to make her escape. Her maniac husband seized a loaded pistol and pursued her. When about sixty yards from the house he overtook her, and placing the pistol against her breast, deliberately fired two shots, killing her instantly. He then fired two shots into his own body, and died in about ten minutes. Six little children, all girls, were left orphans by this horrible affair.

Most Horrible Cruelty.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Dec. 7.—A horrible case of cruelty occurred Monday evening in the juvenile dormitory of the Nunnery of Kenmare, St. Joseph's home. Fred Riley, an incorrigible youngster of 10 years, took Thos. Jones, another inmate, aged 4 years, to the kitchen, where he gagged him with a handkerchief, and then, after removing the child's pants, deliberately placed him upon a red-hot range and held him there. The boys were not missed until the odor of burning flesh was noticed by Sister Mary Evangelist. She hurried to the kitchen and rescued the victim, who cannot survive his dreadful injuries. His tormentor showed no signs of remorse when arrested.

That Ohio Tally-Sheet Forgery.

COLUMBUS, Dec. 7.—The matter of the tally-sheet forgery, committed here at the fall election of 1885, several attempts to unearth the perpetrators of which have failed, was brought up again Monday. An application was filed by State's Attorney Huling for a special grand jury to investigate certain persons, against whom it is said overwhelming evidence has been secured. It seems that one Algernon Granville, formerly a lawyer's clerk here, but now a court stenographer at Chicago, who was in a small way connected with the crime, has turned state's evidence, and it is upon his affidavit that the prosecution will be based.

The Anarchists' Burial Place.

CHICAGO, Dec. 7. The committee appointed by the Anarchists to select a burial place for the executed men has decided to purchase eight lots in Waldheim containing 1,538 square feet, at 60 cents a foot, amounting in all to $919.80. A contract was signed by Messrs. Stauber, Oppenheimer, Lindemeyer and Dr. Schmidt to the effect that no speeches shall be made at the graves of the dead Anarchists, the plans of the monument shall be submitted to the directors, and it shall contain no inscriptions of an inflammatory character. A stone vault will be erected, in which the bodies will be placed.

Murdered His Entire Family of Eight.

MACON, GA., Dec. 7.—Thomas G. Wolfolk was Monday morning arraigned for the murder of his father, stepmother, five brothers and sisters and an aged aunt. Counsel for defense asked for continuance on account of absence of important witnesses, which request was refused by Judge Gustin. The case was promptly called at 2:30 p. m., and at 6 o'clock, when court adjourned, seven jurors were in the box. It is thought the trial will occupy a week's time, and that conviction will result on the first indictment.

The Vilas-Welch Libel Suit.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 7.—Judge Lochren has granted an order in the Postmaster General Vilas-William Welch libel suit, ordering complainants to show cause why in the books and records of the Madison Fire Insurance company should not be produced, to enable Welch to prepare his bill of specifications as required by the court. Welch claims that the books can not be found, and that he believes Vilas is responsible for their disappearance.

A Railway Receiver Asked For.

DAYTON, O., Dec. 7.—Two petitions were filed in the common pleas court here Monday asking for the appointment of a receiver for the Dayton, Ft. Wayne & Chicago road and foreclosure of mortgage. The suits are brought by Charles J. Heinsheimer, one of the bondholders, and by Thirza M. Arnold, who set forth that the road is hopelessly insolvent.

Experimented on His Daughter.

BALTIMORE, Md., Dec. 7.—A fashionable family has furnished a sensation. The father, who is a student of hypnotism, in experimenting put his daughter, aged 14, in a trance, from which she can not be aroused. She has been in this state for a month, and has lost the power of speech.

Life's most essential friend, I drink to thee
And thy advancement in this overfrail world.
Thy laws thou dost not veil in mystery,
'Tis we, ourselves. Thy banner thou unfurled
Dost fling from every hilltop. Thou dost plead
With us to thrust aside the vandlies

Thee not, and he who should a Hercules
Have been in stature grand, and grand in all
Intelligence, shrunken and dwarfed remains
Heaven speed the time when the enshrouding pall
Of worldliness shall be thrown off, when veins

ROMANCE OF A ROSEBUSH.

"It is all to do so," said Miss Henrietta Henshaw, sitting bolt upright in her bamboo rocker. "It is all to do so, I say, for people to think they must make up gimcracks that nobody wants and scatter them about among their friends."

"But it is a birthday present, aunt."

"Well, what of that? Do you suppose because my birthday happens to be coming that I want any one to give me an ungainly piecustion with two Hs worked in the centre?

"Why, if there should be three Hs!" said Lottie, slyly remembering old Peter Hammond's clumsy attentions, with, as he admitted, "an eye to a snug home."

"What's that you say?" snapped Miss Hetta.

Lottie did not venture a repetition, but sat demurely, considering what, under the stress of circumstances, she should do. Lottie was Miss Henrietta's orphan niece, and had been a member of her household for nearly a year. She had learned dearly to love the prim old lady, though that love was not unmixed with fear. Her wants had all been kindly anticipated and generously supplied; but now she had come to her aunt with a request for a few shillings to spend on trifles, of which Miss Hetta did not approve, and had been flatly denied.

Oh, dear, what should she do? Harry had always brought her some tasteful gift, and she did so want to make him a hatband for his new Derby. She had dreamed that she could not, and had put it off till the last moment.

The great drops welled up suddenly to her eyes. If Miss Hetta saw any symptoms of heartache, she had had heartaches herself, and they had never killed her yet. But Lottie did not mean to droop. Auntie was usually kind, and was albeit her only living relative—except Harry. Well, Harry was not a relative exactly—and, oh, dear, if she could only have a hatband.

She forced back the rebellious tears, and went singing about the house like the blithe girl she was.

The birthday morning arrived, and the problem of Harry's present was still unsolved. "If I could just give him something," she sighed, looking wistfully down the long street. "Oh," she said, suddenly, clasping her hands, "I will, I will! What a happy thought!" And she fairly jumped into her cloak and hat and went skipping down the street.

Dr. Beach, an eccentric bachelor, lived in the rather lonely house at the extreme end of the street. Lottie was never sick herself, and Aunt Hetta never employed Dr. Beach for her occasional ailments; yet the bright hearted girl had contrived to make the acquaintance of the uncouth doctor, who liked her and called her "Little Miss."

"What if the dear old man was a little gruff? He was good." And into his office Lottie now went, assured of a warm welcome. Absorbed in her own interest and intent on her errand, she approached the bay window where stood the great monthly rose bush which had been the wonder and envy of the admiring public since almost before Lottie was born.

"Oh, doctor," she said, "I came to ask if you would be so kind as to give me three or four of those lovely buds?"

"What for?" growled the doctor, savagely.

"You see," she began, "I wanted to make something pretty for a birthday gift for—for a friend, but I could not," choking a little, "and I had almost given up hope of anything, when this morning, as I glanced down the road, your beautiful roses seemed to say, 'Come after us,' so here I am. Flowers are always nice to give, you know, and I had none."

"Humph! Why couldn't you make what you wanted to?"

"Aunt Hetta would not let me."

"Humph! Is not Henrietta Henshaw good to you?" he demanded, bristling up.

"Oh, yes, as kind as can be. But she does not believe in birthday gifts, she says."

"Hadn't you any money yourself?"

"No."

"She might give you a cent or two from time to time; then you would have a fund to draw from."

"Oh, she does; I had $5 Monday that I had not needed to use. But I saw Jennie and Tommy Elroy, with their little bare toes peeping out of their old shoes and"——

"So you squandered your money to clothe the feet of those little vagabonds?" growled the doctor, wondering why he hadn't seen the bare toes.

"Yes, I got shoes and the nicest red stockings. Jennie cried and cried when she hugged me because she was so glad," related Lottie, her quick tears starting.

The doctor rubbed his knuckles vindictively in his own eyes.

"Well, little miss, if you had known you could not get any more money for your flummery, would you have spent all you had on the little beggars?"

"I don't know; I hope so; I'm sorry you asked me. I really think I should. But I did want the other so dreadfully that I might have saved out a little."

"You could have got brown stockings."

"So I could. But I guess I'm glad I did not; the red ones are so much prettier, and the poor like pretty things as well as the rich."

The doctor looked ponderingly on the little miss. She was a pretty creature, and as innocent as she was pretty. Though she was 17, her looks and appearance would hardly have claimed for her fifteen well rounded years.

"It is a bridal rose," said Lottie, keeping her errand in mind, as she looked admiringly into the great bush, whose beautiful blossoms rivaled the whiteness of the snow.

"Humph! I suppose so. You would not think now that it had spoiled a wedding. But it did, just fifteen years ago this day."

Lottie looked in alarm at the white, treacherous thing.

"You would not think, either, that a gruff old fellow like me could ever have got a woman to say she would have him."

"Oh, yes, I would," said Lottie, "I think you are the nicest man in the world—except"——

"Except whom?"

"I was going to say, Harry."

"Exceedingly fine compliment you are paying me. You expect some of my choicest flowers for that tidbit of flattery."

Lottie did not reply, but looked in such consternation from the rosebush to himself that the doctor could not but smile.

"You would like to hear the story? Well, it never came from my lips before, little miss, but I will give it to you. You see I had been a medical student under [illegible] diploma and stuck my shingle out here. Soon after that I got acquainted with as trim a built girl as you often see, and after a while, somehow or other, we became engaged. I was young and had my way to make, and we resolved to wait two years before setting down. Over back of the hills yonder there lived a girl named Nancy Brown, a pretty, pale creature, who seemed just ready to go off to the angels. I was called to attend her, and I wanted to do my best. I knew they could never pay me a cent, and perhaps for that reason I went a little oftener than I needed. Nancy had one precious thing, her rosebush; small then, but giving promise of great things. It did seem as if everybody begrudged it to her, for half the town, in one way or another, sought to make it worth her while to give it up.

"Perhaps the motives were good. But, though Nancy was in comparative poverty, no gold was yellow enough to buy her one treasure. Well, her fragility proved not to be incipient consumption after all, and time went on until within twenty-four hours of my wedding day, and that morning I was in my office here on the watch for my sweetheart, who soon, all smiles and blushes, with the consciousness that it was the last time as a maiden, came tripping down the street. I went out to meet her. This bush, not half as large as it is now, stood here in my window.

"'Oh,' said my bride that was to be, in a pretty rapture, 'Nancy has sold you her rose! Did you cross it root and branch with silver coin?'

"'Not I. Nancy gave it to me of her own sweet will.'

"A jealous flush came over my girl's proud face.

"'I thought,' she said, 'that your visits there were more frequent than her illness called for. You love her, and if you are fair to her you are false to me.'

"I made a sharp reply. She had charged me with double dealing. We were both terribly angry. The next morning we were to have been married. That was fifteen years ago, and we have never spoken together since. Nancy was going away to fulfill a promise made in childhood, and she gave me her rose because I had 'saved her life for her lover.' Perhaps I had; but she had unknowingly ruined mine. I kept the bush, and it has blossomed every month with all its might. More than one young mother has begged of me some dainty buds to clasp in her dead baby's hand, and many a bride has pleaded with sweet lips for just a few blossoms to gem her hair. I have denied them all, and have never cut one of the flowers until it withered from the stem. It was not for Nancy's sake, either, but somehow for the life that was to have blessed mine."

"But you did not love your sweetheart much," ventured Lottie, winking off the salt drops that had collected on her long lashes.

"Not love her?" roared the doctor. "Zounds! can a chit like you undertake to gauge the depths of a man's soul?"

"If you had you would have acted differently," bravely asserted this small council of one, sitting in judgment, with her chin resting on her hand.

"Acted differently," thundered the irate doctor. "Pray, Miss Wisdom, how should I have acted?"

"You would have said to your sweetheart, 'I do not love Nancy, but I do love her rose. She is going away and gives it to me in gratitude. But I give the rose and myself and all that I have to you, because I love you better than all the world.' Then, don't you see that everything would have been smooth, and you would have been all these years full of joy?"

"Zounds! so I should!" exclaimed the excited doctor, rising to his feet. "Jenn, come in here," he called. "Help me wrap up this rose tree. There, put it on your hand sled and draw it home for this young lady and set it in the house. And you, little miss, present it with my compliments and best wishes to Miss Henrietta Henshaw. Good heavens, what a fool!" said the doctor, striking his bald head a vigorous thump, when left alone.

Lottie did as she was bidden, giving Aunt Hetta such a galvanic shock as to paralyze her; but the good lady came to enough to glance furtively down the street to see really that the "impertinent white thing" was no longer staring at her from the doctor's bay window. She had a bay window, too, looking southward, and into it she contrived to roll the great box with its wealth of white blossoms.

The doctor, looking stealthily out from his dismantled corner, drew his own conclusions.

"Ahem!" said Miss Hetta. "How long would it take to work that nonsense you were talking about?"

"I could get it done by night," gasped Lottie, all of a delicious tremble.

"Well, child, I did not mean to be cross. Take this and do as you please with it."

Lottie's hand closed quickly over the gold coin; she did not need a tenth of it, and she worked the whole afternoon, to the detriment of her blue eyes and the loss of her supper, till on a garnet ribbon a broad satin stitch of gold, ornamented with tiny forget-me-nots, lettered out the H. B. M. which stood not for Her Britannic Majesty, but some one every bit as regal—Henry B. Manvers, otherwise Harry.

She had run down to the hall, which was flooded with light, and greeted Harry, and had just secured the hatband in his hat when the parlor doors were thrown open, and there stood Aunt Hetta, blushing through the frosts of forty winters, with great bows of white roses passed in her hair and fastened on her bosom. Dr. Beach, portly and portly, was at her side.

"Here, little miss," he shouted, "you and that rascal run for the parson."

The wily physician had armed himself with a ring and a strip of paper signed by the town clerk and before one could say "Jack Robinson" the knot was tied that transformed Miss Henrietta Henshaw into Mrs. Dr. Beach.

Lottie was so bewildered that she could never tell whether she said yea or nay when Henry asked her to be his wife. But the young rascal seems to know, for he is building wondrous castles in the air.

In the sunny parlor, close by the great rose tree, stands an elegant piano—a birthday offering to "little miss" from her "Uncle Doctor."—Cleveland Sun.

Broke the Camera.

"I wish to be taken in this attitude!"

The voice was that of the leading tragedian of far famed "Uncle Tom's Cabin" combination. He sat upon a cushioned divan in front of a camera in a photograph gallery, with one soiled but richly jeweled hand supporting his brow, from beneath which his eyes gazed with an intensely tragic gleam at the framed motto, "Terms Cash," hanging on the wall, and his face settled into an expression of lurid gloom that would have made the hair of a cast iron statue stand on end. The moment approached for the exposure of the plate, and the ticking of the photographer's watch, which he held in his hand, was the only sound that broke the sepulchral silence as the gloom on the face of the eminent histrionic artist deepened into a tragic intensity absolutely thrilling in its awful majesty.

"Ready. Now." In slow, measured tones the operator spoke. With one hand he swiftly removed the black velvet cloth that had covered the instrument, and the sensitive plate, prepared in the mysterious recesses of the dark room, was exposed. For one brief, inappreciable interval only was it thus exposed, and then a terrible crash shook the building, while amid a storm of flying fragments of wood, glass and metal could be seen the outline of a man sitting on a cushioned divan, gazing at the wall with a far away, majestic look of unruffled dramatic grandeur.

The camera had broken.—Chicago Tribune.

Not Without Blemish, However.

"Irene, hear me one moment longer."

The speaker was a young man with a wildly appealing look and an inchoate mustache.

"Irene," he continued, "if all the wealth of devotion that moved Leander to swim the Hellespont, that burned in the breast of Abelard, inspired the muse of Robert Burns to its loftiest flight, sent the blood pulsing through the marble form of Galatea at the bidding of Pygmalion, and carolled forth in the immortal songs of Tom Moore—if the aggregate affection of Solomon for his thousand wives were concentrated upon one beloved object, the whole would feebly represent the emotion with which you have inspired me. Since I have known you, Irene, life has had but one purpose, one aim. Heaven itself would be"——

"Absalom," interrupted the fair girl, regarding the impassioned youth with conflicting emotions eloquently depicted on her speaking face, "I wish you would patronize some fifteen cent barber. I can't endure the odor of cheap bay rum."—Chicago Tribune.

He Put a Handle to It.

The cadets at West Point are expected to address one another with ceremonious politeness, and the latest arrivals are promptly drilled in all social duties toward their fellows. One day a number of cadets accosted a new comer, and the following conversation ensued: "Well, mister, what's your name?" "John Walden." "Sir!" yelled his interlocutor, horrified at such an unceremonious answer. "John Walden," innocently repeated the culprit. "Well, sir, I want you to put a 'sir' on it." "Sir John Walden," was the calm rejoinder. The error was such a natural one, and was perpetrated in so solemn a manner, that the cadets turned away with roars of laughter, and the new man was ever afterward known in the corps as Sir John.—The Argonaut.

Not Room Enough to Grow In.

Esquimaux (to stranger)—Hello! How in the mischief did you get up here?

"Half a mile or so."

"No. What do you want to go beyond that for? You're further north now than any explorer ever got before."

"Well, I'm laying off a new addition to Kansas City, and that'll cut it off rather short."—Lincoln (Neb.) Journal.

Capturing the Beaus' Heads.

"One of the funniest 'fads' of some of the girls of today," remarked a hatter, "is the desire for the shape of the heads of their favorite young men on paper. Every young man who buys a hat now wants the conformator used on his head. This, as you know, shows the bumps with the greatest accuracy and within the space of a few inches. The girl pastes these in a scrap book, and when a good selection has been secured they make an interesting study."—Philadelphia Call.

WHAT THEY THINK OF IT.

OPINION OF CONGRESSMEN ON THE

Some of Them Say It Is a Good Thing for the Republicans—Important Cabinet Nominations—An Indiana Man for House Clerk—Carlisle and the House Committees.

WASHINGTON CITY, Dec. 7.—After the reading of the president's message in the respective houses of congress the Associated Press interviewed a large number of congressmen as to their opinion of the communication. The following are a few of the expressions of opinion:

Senator Evarts said he was impressed with the brevity of the message, and that anything in the way of brevity in politics was to be commended.

Senator Platt said he didn't know whether he wished to express an opinion or not—for publication. If he did it might not be complimentary.

Senator Edmunds said he hadn't read it yet, and until he had done so did not care to express an opinion.

Senator Sanders: "I have read it very well, but what I did hear of it struck me as being something in the way of a free trade argument."

Senator Cullom: "A very able document."

Senator Paddock (Republican): "It is a big card for the Republicans."

Senator Hiscock: "We can carry New York by the biggest majority it was ever carried if they give us that platform."

Senator Teller: "Its a remarkable message and very weak."

Senator Fry: "Its a good enough platform for the Republicans."

Senator Allison: "If the president means free trade—and I take it that he does—it will be a good enough document for the Republicans."

Senator Chandler: "I only fear the Democratic party will not endorse it, and will go back on it. The Republicans want nothing better with which to sweep the country."

Senator Spooner: "A free trade essay. I'm glad to see them show their hand."

Senator Reagan: "I like, and endorse it."

Senator Gray: "Strong, original and characteristic of the man. Mr. Cleveland is the strongest president since Jackson."

Senator Eustis: "It is an admirable message and suits us."

Senator Blackburn: "If there's anything I don't want to be quoted on its this message."

Representative Heilmand, of Pennsylvania, Republican: "We can defeat this doctrine by 100,000 majority in Pennsylvania."

Representative Glover, Democrat: "I heard only portions of it, but I have talked with many of the Ohio delegation and they are against the message because of the argument against a tariff on wool. Without Ohio in accord, I fear but little can be accomplished."

Representative Cox, Democrat: "Didn't hear it at all, but it is on the right lines."

Representative Gibson, Democrat: "The strongest and boldest expression ever made by any one on the subject. I heartily approve every word of it. It is the line we must hew to."

Representative Bliss, Democrat: "Tell you what I think of it to-morrow."

Representative Hovey, of Indiana: "It creates an emergency and ignores the real issue before the country—that of distributing the surplus. It will harm the Democratic party, and by ignoring the soldiers bring them solidly over to us."

Representative Fuller, of Iowa, Republican: "We can stand such stuff as that."

Representative Bayne, of Pennsylvania, Republican: "With a balance of trade against us amounting to $50,000,000 annually, a man capable of single entry bookkeeping ought to know such talk is absurd."

Representative Owen, of Indiana, Republican: "It is a characteristic message, written, as usual, on the line of a stump speech. The demand for free wool and the silence on sugar, when there are 1,000,000 wool growers and less than 17,000 sugar producers, will not quite meet the better judgment of the people."

Representative Bingham, of Pennsylvania, Republican: "It weakens the president and is the most extreme Democratic sentiment I ever heard uttered on the floor of this house."

Representative Hooker, of Mississippi, Democrat: "It is strong, unique, and the grounds are well taken. The party will indorse it."

Representative McKinley, of Ohio, Republican: "The issue is made. It is free trade against protection, and will give us strength."

Representative White, of Indiana, Republican: "A rehash, and a misstatement of figures and facts."

Representative Mills said: "Good, elegant. Could not be better."

Representative Springer said: "That is a good one. He hits the nail on the head every time. We have our platform."

Representative Townshend said: "Elegant, elegant, it beats them all. It could not be better. We are going to stand by him and we are going to win."

Representative Hemphill expressed satisfaction.

Representative Randall declared that he had nothing to say on the subject at present. He was going to read the message again.

Representative Bland said: "Its the best we have ever had. I have not heard its equal since I have been in congress."

A large number of Democrats in both houses declined to express opinions of the message until they have more carefully considered it.

The House Journal Clerk.

WASHINGTON CITY, Dec. 7.—The removal of Mr. Harry Smith as journal clerk of the house of representatives bids fair to create quite a breeze among members of the house. [illegible] Arensdorf Trial.

[illegible], Dec. 7.—In the Arensdorf case the opening argument for the state was closed Tuesday noon by Attorney Hubbard. He sought to show the inconsistency of the testimony of the defense; that it was contradictory and unreliable. The affinities of business interests of Arensdorf were such as to prompt the deed, that Arensdorf had largey interests at stake—more than any of the party. Had Leavitt named as the murderer Treibar, Peters, or Plaith, or any one except Arensdorf the world would have said "Amen." Attorney Argo [illegible] for the defense in the afternoon.

NOT WALKING ANY MORE.

Death of John Owen Snyder, the Indiana Walking Man.

WABASH, Ind., Dec. 7.—John Owen Snyder, known all over the United States as "the Indiana walking man," died Monday at Hartford City, his home. Snyder's case was pronounced by physicians to be the most remarkable on record. He was crazy on but one subject, and that was walking. At times he was perfectly rational. About two years ago he imagined he had to walk, and after commencing could not stop. He ate, drank and shaved while walking, not stopping for either rain or snow. He walked day and night, and would cry out in pain when his friends tried to stop him. They concluded to let him have his own way, and for almost two years Snyder continued his tireless, endless walk. It is estimated that he has walked a distance more than equal to twice the circuit of the globe. Snyder was a farmer and had a horror of notoriety. He chased several enterprising showmen who came to hire him off his farm, but finally went to Chicago, where he was on exhibition, and proved a wonderful attraction. On the way to Chicago he could not keep still, but walked up and down the car. He continued walking almost to the time of his death. His family is left in comfortable circumstances, as Snyder made considerable money walking in the museums.

TECUMSEH & FRANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB.

Tecumseh and Franklin Farmer's club on the evening of Nov. 30. The evening being fine a large number assembled to enjoy the hospitality of the host and hostess; also, the good program of the evening.

The literary part of the program was well prepared and nicely rendered by the participants.

The leading factor in the evening's entertainment was the discussion on the very practical question: How are we to get rid of noxious weeds?

A. VanVlkenburg led the discussion, by saying the main points in this warfare are to prepare the soil well for all crops; cultivate the growing crops; and never allow any weed on the farm. In order to do this supply yourselves with good tools and work early and late.

Mr. Harry: Mr. V's plan is mine, yet thus far I have failed to rid myself of a patch of Canada thistles. They seem to spread, for pieces pulled from the root even under a heavy sod.

J. Upthegrove: The way I killed bur docks was to cut them while in bloom. If they [illegible] they [illegible] before [illegible]

[illegible] Nettles [illegible] amount of [illegible] seems to exist [illegible]

F. Brown: I have tried pickling [illegible] by pinning the [illegible] in a very dry [illegible] I did [illegible] thistles [illegible] stalk [illegible] I have about despaired in my efforts to exterminate redroot. I have tried nearly every thing and have only succeeded in checking [illegible]

A. VanVlkenburg: When I first went on to [illegible] farm a few years ago, I found [illegible] I dug a deep hole and buried [illegible] days to pull it, since which time I have had no trouble from the place. I think through cultivation a good [illegible] I think the plant called [illegible] weed I have seen growing [illegible] of the village of Tecumseh, and which is common in [illegible] by [illegible] farmers [illegible] last [illegible] I kill [illegible] Colorado grow [illegible] they have [illegible] They would [illegible] a few and they would [illegible]

W. S. Osborn: I prefer quite [illegible] to the former by [illegible] As [illegible] it is not so [illegible] It has a good pasture.

Mr. Moore said he had seen nettles killed by cutting them in the old of the moon in June.

Mr. Swartz said he had kept Canada thistles by cutting them while in bloom and when the stalk was hollow. Nettles could be killed by mowing them while in blossom.

After a few others had advanced similar thoughts, the following program was announced for the next meeting which is to be held at Thos. Langton's, Dec. 14th:

OTHER [illegible] MATT. XIII, 31-33; 44-52

NOTES—"Grain of mustard seed"—Whether this refers to the Salvadora Persica of European botanists or to the Sinapis, the common mustard plant of Palestine, is uncertain. The former becomes a large shrub or a tree, twenty-five feet high, but this [illegible] was not found in Palestine, though found now and then on the shores of the Dead Sea. The latter, the Sinapis orientalis, fulfills all the necessary conditions. It was a seed the farmers were accustomed to sow; and it was proverbially small among the Jews, though not the smallest seed [illegible] takes cognizance of. Truth will not arrest its silent march till be it the word is penetrated to the core. The kingdom of earth shall become the Kingdom of Heaven.

Some stray into church or the prayer meeting by chance and stumble on the truth. Many discover it unexpectedly in unlooked for places. These fortuitous discoveries make truth none the less a treasure and worthy of every sacrifice to make it one's own.

The sacrifice is the giving up all that is inconsistent with the possession of this spiritual prize.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Placed, as it was, like a bolt from a clear sky, like a vigorous thunder storm it will clear the political atmosphere wonderfully. It goes without saying that all revenue reform Democrats are enthusiastic in its praise, and outside of Pennsylvania the Democracy is practically a unit on this subject. As the smoke lifts from the battle field and the people as well as the politicians have time to take their reckoning, it becomes apparent that the message will [illegible] to its effects. It has crystallized the issue for next year so that parties will know where they stand. We append a few press comments showing the temper of the newspapers. Many protectionists approve of the message and the Sam Randall Contingent in Congress is already accepting the situation and will co-operate with speaker Carlisle in passing a tariff reduction bill. Here are some extracts from a few leading Democrat papers.

The New York World says:

The admirable message of the president has given to the Democratic party what it has longed lacked—an issue and a leader. The issue is tax reform; the leader is the president.

The Detroit Free Press says:

President Cleveland is the first of the presidents to devote his annual message exclusively to a single topic, but there is no room for question that the vast majority of American people will fully justify him in the institution of a new precedent. In a sense wholly different from the ordinary sense in which such praises are used, the reduction of the surplus and the reform of the tariff are the vital issues of the day, and while the president might in the perfunctory manner which has been too common with his predecessors, evade responsibility by briefly commending the subject to congress while he orated upon our foreign relations and the facts shown by the department reports, he has done much more wisely by devoting himself to the vital issue and urging it upon congress as strongly as possible. There can be no excuse now, if there may have been heretofore, for any neglect by senators and members of this very important matter.

The Toledo Blade says:

Mr. Cleveland is a political tariff reformer. Upon this subject he is in accord with the popular sentiment of the great west, and is the with the leading Democratic states of the country. He is not ahead of his party but with its party, and he only has his share from the practical demonstration of fixed principles of progress economy, which have been [illegible] for half a century and embodied in the declarations of many Democratic conventions. Here again Mr. Cleveland acknowledges respect, first on respect for the platform upon which he went before the country requesting the suffrages of the American people. That platform, as well as Mr. Cleveland, was approved by the majority of voting citizens in 1884, and that declaration of political principles promised tariff reform. Democrats believe in the doctrine and the president is honest in his endeavor to redeem the pledge the country accepted in good faith. The president points out several methods of reform, and if congress will take up his suggestions in the same spirit of candor and firmness which actuated their utterance, the country will fare well and the business of the land will be invigorated and strengthened for all time to come.

The Philadelphia Times is an independent Republican sheet, and has for years been the special organ of the Pennsylvania high tariff ring. It sees the hand-writing on the wall and comes out strongly in favor of tariff revision. Read what it says:

The President's message, delivered to Congress is one of the most perspicuous and incisive of the revenue and industrial deliverances ever made to the country. It is in no sense theoretical; it accepts and treats an exceptional "condition" of the country that must be met, regardless of ideal theories of revenue or trade, and the President hews to the line in his own rugged way in defining the relations of manufacturers, workingmen and consumers to each other and to the general interests of the whole country. No specific recommendation is made of modification of our internal taxes, as they do not apply to the actual necessaries of life, while customs taxes, when unwisely levied, impose extortionate exactions upon consumers and deprive labor of much, and sometimes more than all, of the advantages given it by protective duties. The question of reduction of internal taxes is left to Congress without positive Executive suggestion.

The above was printed the day following the message.

Three days later the Times says, in a lengthy editorial dispatch from Washington:

Notwithstanding the confusion created in Washington by the plain, blunt message of the President, one practical result of the message is the now admitted certainty of tariff revision this session. The necessities of [illegible] and irrefutably presented by the President that no party and no faction can maintain itself without getting down to actual tariff revision. It is a double necessity first to reduce the national revenue to the necessary [illegible] our manufacturers [illegible] materials to give them [illegible] markets, and the necessities [illegible] industrial establishments [illegible] the necessary [illegible] It is the pressure [illegible] ing interests for [illegible] that controls the Republican movement for tariff [illegible] no longer a secret that [illegible] land factories [illegible] shall be supplied with [illegible] materials. They want [illegible] and other chemicals [illegible] cheapened necessaries of [illegible] present wages [illegible] labor to buy [illegible] while Republicans have been keeping the tariff [illegible] longer in the support of [illegible] protective policy that [illegible] increases the cost of [illegible] products. And with Republican New England ready for revision, comes an emphatic command from the Republican West and Northwest that the party leaders must obey or lose [illegible] supremacy in half a [illegible] the hitherto most reliable Republican states. When the Chicago Tribune says that the President's message "presents a common basis [illegible] statesmanship on which Republicans and Democrats are bound by every consideration of the public welfare and of political expediency to stand together," it is an admission that only the foolhardy will dispute.

The big dailies of Chicago are the Times and Herald, Democratic; the Tribune, News and Inter Ocean, Republican. All of them except the Inter Ocean alone, heartily approve of the message.

The Tribune is the ablest Republican paper in the Northwest and was a thick and thin Blaine organ in 1884, and has never faltered in its party allegiancy. Read what the Tribune says:

Full justification of President Cleveland's unprecedented course in devoting his annual communication Congress exclusively to a consideration of the surplus and the best means of distributing it is to be found in the message itself. The message is able and statesmanlike, business like in style, perspicuous in statement, clear in its reasoning and irrefutable in its conclusions.

The message rises above party lines and presents a common basis of patriotic statesmanship on which Republicans and Democrats are bound by every consideration of the public welfare and of political expediency to stand together. The position taken in the previous Congress by the Minnesota delegation and some other Republicans must be stoutly maintained by the Republican side of the House at this session, or they and perhaps the party which they represent will be overwhelmed.

The message is simply the tariff reduction plank of the Republican party, adopted in 1884, expanded. It is neither more nor less than a textual sermon on that passage of the resolutions which promises to "reduce the surplus by correcting the incongruities of the tariff," and it is certainly no the less binding on the Republicans for being now so interpreted by a Democratic President. This is not a time for the message merely claims, for the discussion of the theories of protection and free trade. Whatever difference of opinion there may be on general propositions of political economy no one can honestly and intelligently deny that the present state of the public treasury necessitates reduction.

The Detroit Evening News states the situation in a nut shell as follows, and no one can accuse the Evening News of being a Democratic sheet:

Mr. Cleveland, in his message, outlined the issue of the coming presidential campaign. Mr. Blaine, in the elaborate interview published in his recognized organ, the New York Tribune, has eliminated all uncertainty from the question of the candidates.

Mr. Cleveland has defined the issue to be whether the policy of protection shall survive. Mr. Blaine has made it clear that he is the man for the hour and the one whom the Republicans must again select as their leader. The battle of '88 is to be the contest of '84 fought over again, with the same generals at the heads of the opposing armies and the line of battle more sharply defined. Whatever doubt existed as to Mr. Cleveland's renomination by the democrats was removed by his vigorous and aggressive message demanding tariff reform. The republicans must meet the issue and fight the battle on the grounds which Mr. Cleveland has marked out. When they look around for a leader under these circumstances it is quite natural that their eyes should first rest on the banner of the plumed knight. If they cannot win a protective victory under his able and inspiring leadership, they may as well give up the contest in advance.

The two parties are practically arrayed as follows:

DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

For President:

GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.

Platform:

1. Reduced taxation to the necessities of economical government.

2. The government, in seeking its necessary revenue, should tax the luxuries of the rich and the vicious, and relieve from taxation the necessities of the poor.

REPUBLICAN PARTY.

For President:

JAMES G. BLAINE of Maine.

Platform:

1. Maintain the surplus by continued high taxation, and spend it for fortifications, or divide it among the states. But in any event, keep up the taxes to the highest point.

2. In distributing the taxes, keep up the present system in which the taxes on the necessities of the poor are highest, and those on the luxuries of the rich are lowest.

Mistress—I am glad to see that you enjoy sleeping so much. You seem to make a business of it. Bridget—Enjoy slape, is it? How could I, I'd like yez to tell me. The minit I lay down I'm asleep, an' the minit I'm awake I have to git up. Where's the time for enjoyin' it to come in?—Philadelphia Call.

The Half Price Boy.

That fall Mr. Wilkins sold his house and tried boarding for the winter. And it would have been very funny, if it had not been very sad, to see Mrs. Wilkins bargaining for room and board for two, with a little child thrown in.

He was a very small eater, she said, and could easily be fed from her plate, and he would wait and not require an extra seat at table, and sleep on a sofa in her room, so he would be no trouble to any one.

So he was included, like a cat on a parcel, with their belongings, and he sat in the wood, though he fed his mother's dead, and read her face with his great Blue eyes while she haggled about him. And she told his father that Harby had outgrown his foolish baby fashion of asking questions.

But he thought! Oh, deep in his little heart he thought, and thought over the complex mysteries of life.

One night he lay awake on the sofa bed and could not sleep. His head was hot and felt twice its natural size. Pains soon he began to toss. His mother and father heard and arose.

"What's the matter?"

But it was they who were dreaming. The child was waking. Waking in the morning that has no awakening.

Remorseless fever has lost new words with an agony of remorse that came too late.

Useless, dear God, let me in. I haven't any money, but I am 5 years old, and half price. Nobody wants me. There isn't any place for a little boy without money. If you'll just take me in there I won't be in anybody's way—and I'm—so—tired—tired."

He died at dawn. The flush on his cheek faded—the tired little heart was at rest forever.—Detroit Free Press.

Consumption Short Hand Writer.

Mr. A. S. White, the well known author of "White's Phonography," famous as the [illegible] of the West, of the World's Fair, is in the metropolis, Lockport, Kansas. Fifteen years ago he was a hopeless victim of consumption, [illegible] by the use of a remedy so little known that it was a stranger from his office, 62 Washington st., Chicago, dated June 20, 1887. He writes:

"Your remedy has done wonderful service for me. For the past five years I have been troubled with rheumatic pains.

"My right hand had become almost useless and I was gradually losing speed as a shorthand writer. A friend of mine, Dr. Dodrich, advised me of your remedy. I used a dozen bottles of S. S. S. and am now entirely recovered. I shall never cease to commend your excellent medicines, and wish you much success.

"Yours truly, A. S. WHITE."

And here is another witness:

"BENTON, Ark., August, 22th, 1887.

"Last spring I was dangerously afflicted with erysipelas, and my life was despaired of by my physicians. As a last hope I tried S. S. S. and soon found relief, and in two weeks was able to attend to my business. I used five bottles.

Letter from the Assistant Foreman of the Delivery Department—Subject in which Thousands are deeply Concerned.
About five years ago I suffered from painful constipation and great pain and weakness in the lower part of my back, pain in the limbs, had taste in the mouth, disgust at food, and great mental and bodily depression.
I live at 241 York st., Jersey City, and on arriving home one night I found a copy of the Shaker Almanac that had been left during the day. I read the article "What is the Disease that is Coming Upon Us?" It described my symptoms and feelings better than I could if I had written a whole book. My trouble was indeed "like a thief in the night," for it had been stealing upon me unawares for years. I sent for a bottle of Shaker Extract of Roots or Siegel's Syrup, and before I had taken one-half of it I felt the welcome relief. In a few weeks I was like my old self. I enjoyed and digested my food. My kidneys soon recovered tone and strength, and the urinary troubles vanished. I was well.
Millions of people need some medicine simply to act on the bowels. To them I commend Shaker Extract in the strongest possible terms. It is the gentlest, pleasantest, safest and surest purgative in this world. The most delicate women and children may take it. One point more: I have all the more confidence in this medicine because it is prepared by the Shakers. I may claim to be a religious man myself and I admire the Shakers for their zeal, consistency and strict business integrity. What they make may be trusted by the public. W. H. HALL.

A SUMMER ROMANCE.

And I thought her the daintiest girl
That ever lived; and I loved her so!
She has set my brain awhirl!
For she was charmingly gay that night
As we stood on the shore in the soft moonlight,
And never a soul was nigh.

So I whispered low: "I love you, dear,
And you thrill me through and through!
As I look in your eyes, in the moonlight here,
It is all that I can do
To keep from straining you close to me now
And kissing your eyes and your lips—I vow
It's hard to be good!" said I.

FOR HONOR'S SAKE.

It appeared to me that the first thing I had to consider in the solution, if any, that the alphabetical letters and figures bore to the words to which they formed a frame. I did not lose sight of the suggestion which immediately arose that this frame work of figures and alphabetical letters might be placed there as a blind, although the evident care and pains which had been bestowed upon them was opposed to the suggestion. But then, again, the care thus exercised might be intended to more deeply mystify any strange person into whose hands the missive might fall. In order not to deface or mutilate the original, I made two exact copies of it for my own purposes, using as a kind of ruler one of the playing cards which Dr. Daincourt had also found in Mabel Rutland's desk.

There were two words in the missive which soon attracted me. These were the third word, "diamond," in the fifth line, and the second word, "bracelet," in the sixth line. "Diamond bracelet." I did not doubt that this was the diamond bracelet which Mr. Rutland had presented to his daughter, and which she could not wear at the dinner party because it was not at that time in her possession. Here, then, was a clew, but here I stopped. No ingenuity that I could bring to bear enabled me to connect other words with "diamond bracelet." I cudgelled my brains for at least half an hour. Then all at once it occurred to me (what in the excitement of my pursuit I may very well be excused for not having thought of before) that the playing card, the nine of hearts, must bear some relation to the missive. I placed it upon the paper. Every word was hidden by the surface of the card; only the figures and the alphabetical letters were visible. "Doubtless," thought I, "if I cut out the pips of a nine of hearts, and place it upon the paper, I shall see certain words which will form the subject matter upon which Eustace Rutland wrote to his sister." In that case the mystery was confined to nine words, which, whatever their arrangement, would not be too difficult to intelligibly arrange. I would not mutilate Miss Rutland's playing cards. I had packs of my own in the house, and from these I selected the nine of hearts and cut out the pips. It was not an easy matter, and in my eagerness I pretty effectually destroyed the surface of my table; but that did not trouble me. My interest was now thoroughly aroused, and grew keener when, placing the nine of hearts upon Eustace Rutland's mystery letter, I found these words disclosed:

Face—stares—in—send—money—death—me—instantly—the.

Here, then, in these nine words, was the communication which Eustace Rutland intended his sister to understand. I copied them on a separate sheet of paper and arranged them in different ways until I arrived at their correct solution:

"Death stares me in the face, send money instantly."

Congratulating myself upon my cleverness, I came to the conclusion that Eustace Rutland, being banished from his father's house and not being able to obtain from his father the funds necessary for his disreputable career, was taking advantage of his sister's devoted affection for him, and was in the habit of calling upon her to supply him with money, which, no doubt, the young lady did to the best of her ability. Curiosity led me to the task of endeavoring to discover whether the alphabetical letters and the figures in the framework bore any relation to this communication. With only the nine words exposed through the pips of the nine of hearts which I had cut away, I saw that the first word, "death," was the sixth, and the second word, "stares," was the second, and the third word, "me," was the seventh. The sequence of the figures, therefore, was 6, 2, 7. Now, how were these three figures arranged in the framework? The figure 6 came after the letter M, the figure 2 came after the letter H, the figure 7 came after the letter H. Satisfied that I had found the key, I began to study how these figures from 1 to 9, representing the nine words in the communication and the nine of hearts in the playing card, were arranged in the framework in such a manner as to lead an informed person at once to the solution. There must be a starting point with which both Eustace and his sister Mabel were acquainted. What was this starting point? One of the letters of the alphabet. What letter? A. Starting, then, from A in the framework, I found that the figures from 1 to 9 ran thus: 6, 2, 7, 3, 9, 1, 4, 5, 8. Upon following, in this order, the course of the words which were exposed by the playing card with the nine pips cut out, I came to the conclusion that I had correctly interpreted this first mystery letter. I was very pleased, believing that the key I had discovered would lead me to a correct reading of Eustace's second and third letter to his sister.

So absorbed had I been in the unraveling of this mystery letter, which occupied me a good hour and a half, that I had lost sight during the whole of that time of the two words which had at first enchained my attention — "diamond bracelet." "Death stares me in the face, send money instantly," had appeared to me so reasonable a construction to be placed upon the communication of a man who must often have seen in a desperate strait for want of funds, that the thought did not obtrude itself that these words might be merely a blind, and that, in the words that remained after the obliteration of this sentence, the correct solution was to be found. The longer I considered, the stronger became my doubts; with "diamond bracelet" staring me in the face, I felt that I had been following a Will-o'-the-wisp.

I had asked Dr. Daincourt the date of the dinner party at which Mr. Rutland had detected the absence of the diamond bracelet on his daughter's arm. That date was the 8th of September. I examined the postmark on the envelope of Eustace Rutland's first communication; it was the 26th of September. Mr. Rutland had laid upon his daughter the injunction that the diamond bracelet was to be shown to him before the end of the month. What month? September. She had produced it in time, and her brother's missive must have conveyed to her some information respecting the missing article of jewelry. The claims of society in which I had indulged took a flight; I had not discovered the clew.

I set myself again to work. I felt now as a man feels who is hunting out a great mystery or a great criminal, and upon the success of whose endeavor his own safety depends. It seemed to me as if it were not so much Edward Layton's case as my own in which I was engaged. Never in the course of my career have I been so interested. I determined to set aside the words, "Death stares me in the face, send money instantly," and to search, in the words that remained, for the true meaning of Eustace Rutland's first communication. I copied them in the order in which they were arranged, and they ran as follows:

F 20 X 2 C 14 H 7 E 8
B 17 Birds the
S in trees back got I
M your hundred
11 trees the won are
O river diamond gayly
I on bracelet four singing
F cherry the
13 W 18 T 8 A 11 N 9 I 5 K 10 R 12
4 A 15 P 16 N 3 H

I counted the number of words, there were twenty-two. Now, was the true reading of the communication contained in the whole of these twenty-two words, or in only a portion of them, and if in only a portion, in what portion? In how many words? There lay the difficulty. The words "diamond bracelet" gave me a distinct satisfaction, but there were other words which I could not by any exercise of ingenuity connect them with, such as "birds"—"trees"—"river"—"gayly"—"cherry"—"singing." Undoubtedly the communication was a serious one, and these words seemed to be inimical to all ideas of seriousness. How to select. What to select? How to arrange the mystery? What was the notation? Ah, the notation! I had discovered the notation of the sentence I had set aside for the time. What if the same notation would lead me to the clew I was in search of? The arrangement of the figures from 1 to 9 was arbitrated by the first letter in the alphabet, A. I would try whether that arrangement would afford any satisfaction in the twenty-two words that remained. It would be an affectation of vanity on my part if I say that this idea occurred to me instantly. It did not do so. It was only after long and concentrated attention and consideration that it came to me, and then I set it immediately into practical operation. The first figure in the sentence I had discovered was 6. I counted six in the present arrangement of the words. It ended with the word "got." Crossing out the word "got" and placing it upon a separate sheet of paper I proceeded. The second figure in the sentence I had discarded was 2. I counted two on from the word "got" and arrived at "your." I crossed out this word "your" and proceeded. The third figure in the sentence I had discarded was 7. I counted seven words on from "your" and came to "diamond." I treated this word in a similar way to the last two and continued the process. "Got your diamond." Now for "bracelet." The next figure was 3. I counted three words from "diamond" and came to "bracelet."

I was more excited than I can describe. There is scarcely anything in the world that fills a man with such exultation as success, and I was on the track of success: "Got your diamond bracelet." The following figure was 9. I counted on nine and came to the word "back." "Got your diamond bracelet back." I continued. The next figure was 1. This was represented by the word "I." The next figure was 4, represented by the word "won." The next figure was 5, represented by the word "four." The next figure was 8, represented by the word "hundred." I continued the same process and came back to the figure 6, represented by the word "on." The next figure was 2, represented by the word "cherry."

I stopped here for a reason and I read the words I had crossed out and written on a separate sheet of paper. They ran thus:

"Got your diamond bracelet back. I won 400 on Cherry."

It was not without a distinct reason that I paused here. Mixing with the world and moving in all shades and classes of society, I must confess—as I have no doubt other men would confess if they were thoroughly ingenuous—to certain weaknesses, one of which is to put a sovereign or two (seldom more) upon every classic horse race, and upon every important handicap during the year. I nearly always lose—and serve me right. But it happened, strangely enough, that in this very month of September, during which Eustace Rutland sent his mysterious communication to his sister Mabel, one of the most celebrated handicaps of the year was won by a horse named Cherry, and that I had two sovereigns on that very horse. It started at long odds. I remembered that the bet I made was two sovereigns, to a hundred, and that I had won what is often called a century upon the race. I was convinced that I had come to the legitimate end of Eustace Rutland's letter: "Got your diamond bracelet back. I won 400 on Cherry."

This young reprobate, then, was indulging in horse racing. His sister Mabel had written to him an account of the scene between herself and her father at the dinner party. She had given him her diamond bracelet to extricate him from some scrape, and he had been luckily enabled, by his investment on the horse Cherry, to redeem it—most likely from the pawnbroker—in time for his sister to exhibit it to her father. So as to be certain that I had got the proper clew, and had arrived at the gist of Eustace's communication, I wrote down the words that remained, which were:

"Birds—the—the—in—are—the—trees—runs—rivers—gayly—singing."

It was an easy task now for me to apply the same test to these remaining words, and I found that they formulated themselves in this fashion:

"The river runs gayly. The birds are singing in the trees."

I was curious to ascertain whether there were any special sign in the framework of Eustace Rutland's communication by which the person engaged with him in the mystery letter could be guided. I counted the words in each sentence. The words in the first sentence were nine—the nine of hearts. The number of words in the second sentence was eleven. The number of words in the third sentence was eleven. After the alphabetical letter A in the framework I saw the figure 11, and I was satisfied, the last eleven words of the sentence of eleven words, referring to the diamond bracelet and to his winning on Cherry, that Eustace wished his sister Mabel to understand. At the same time I was satisfied in my own mind that, [illegible] a man might spend days over the cryptograph without arriving at the correct solution.

I had taken no count of the passing time. Engrossed and absorbed in my occupation, I was surprised, when it had reached what I believed to be a successful termination, to find that it was nearly six o'clock in the morning.

IV.

Dr. Daincourt called while I was dressing, after a few hours' sleep. I am not usually a dreamer, but I had a dream so strange that I awoke with the memory of it in my mind. It was of hands—ladies' hands—every finger of which was covered with rings. Holding the theory that I have already explained that the imagination during sleep is not creative, but invariably works upon a foundation of fact, I was endeavoring to trace the connection between my singular dream and some occurrence or circumstance within my knowledge, when Dr. Daincourt entered.

"Well," were his first words, "have you made anything of the letters which I left with you last night?"

"I was employed only upon one," I said, "which kept me up until 6 o'clock this morning. I don't begrudge the time or the labor, because I have discovered the clew to Master Eustace Rutland's communications to his sister."

"That means," said Dr. Daincourt, excitedly, "that you have discovered the mystery of the 'nine of hearts'"

"In so far," I replied, "as respects the playing cards found in Miss Rutland's desk—yes, I have discovered that part of the mystery; but I have not yet discovered the mystery of the particular nine of hearts which was found in the pocket of Edward Layton's ulster."

I showed Dr. Daincourt the result of my labors on the previous night, and he was delighted and very much interested, but presently his face became clouded.

"I am still disturbed," he said, "by the dread that the task you are engaged upon may bring Miss Rutland into serious trouble."

"I hope not," was my rejoinder to the remark, "but I shall not allow considerations of any kind to stop me. Edward Layton is an innocent man, and I intend to prove him so."

"If he is innocent," said Dr. Daincourt, "then Miss Rutland must also be innocent."

"Undoubtedly," I said, "with a cheerful smile, which did much to reassure the worthy doctor.

"Have you opened the two sealed letters," asked Dr. Daincourt, "which I brought from Mrs. Rutland's house?"

"No," I replied. "I have devoted myself only to the first of the opened letters found in Miss Rutland's desk. I shall proceed immediately with the second, and then I shall feel myself warranted in opening and reading the letters which arrived for Miss Rutland during her illness. By the way, doctor, I have had a singular dream, and upon your entrance I was endeavoring to track it. It was a dream of ladies' hands, covered with rings."

"Any bodies attached to the hands?" inquired Dr. Daincourt, jocosely.

"No; simply hands. They seemed to pass before my vision, and to rise up in unexpected places—pretty shapely hands. But it was not so much the hands that struck me as being singular as the fact that they were covered with rings of one particular kind."

"What kind?"

"I must have seen thousands of rings upon the shapely fingers, and there was not one that was not set with diamonds and turquoises."

A light came into Dr. Daincourt's face.

"And you mean to tell me that you can't discover the connection?"

"No; I can't for the life of me discover it."

"That proves," said Dr. Daincourt, "how easy it is for a man engaged upon a serious task to overlook important facts which are as plain as the noonday sun."

"What facts have I overlooked, doctor?"

"Have you the newspapers in the room containing the report of the trial?"

"Yes."

"Give me the one containing the report of the third day's proceedings."

I handed it to him, and he ran his eyes down the column in which the evidence of the waiter in Prevost's restaurant was reported.

"The waiter was asked," said Dr. Daincourt, "whether the lady who accompanied Edward Layton was married, and whether there were rings upon the fingers of her ungloved hand."

"Yes, yes," I cried, "I remember! And the waiter answered that she wore a ring of torquoises and diamonds. Of course—of course. That explains my dream."

"Yes," said Dr. Daincourt, "that explains it."

"I need no further assurance," I said, "to prove [illegible] Miss Rutland who was [illegible] company on the night [illegible] much, but I wish to ask [illegible] her the young lady possesses [illegible] rings, and is in the habit of wearing it. Your face is clouded again, doctor. You fear that I am really about to bring trouble upon Miss Rutland. You are mistaken; I am working in the cause of justice. If I prove Edward Layton to be innocent, no shadow of suspicion can rest upon Miss Rutland. You must trust entirely to me. Can you not now understand why Edward Layton refused to be defended by a shrewd legal mind? He would not permit a cross examination of any of the witnesses which would bring the name of Mabel Rutland before the public. To save her honor, to protect her from scandal and calumny, he is ready to sacrifice himself. He shall not do so. I will prevent it. Your patient is in a state of delirium, you tell me. She knows nothing of what passes around her, she recognizes no one, she has not heard of the peril in which Edward Layton stands. Say that she remains in this state of ignorance until Edward Layton is sentenced and hanged for a crime which he did not commit—say, then, that she recovers and hears of it—reads of it—why, she will go mad! It would be impossible for her to preserve her reason in circumstances so terrible. There is a clear duty before us, Dr. Daincourt, and we must not shrink from it. I need not urge upon you to use your utmost skill to restore Mabel Rutland to health, and to the consciousness of what is passing around her. If before Edward Layton is put again upon his trial I do not clear him, I shall not hesitate to make some kind of appeal to Miss Rutland which, even should she remain delirious, shall result in favor of the man who is so nobly and rashly protecting her good name."

"Remember," said Dr. Daincourt, gravely, "that she is in great danger."

"You mean that she may die soon?"

"Yes."

"But not suddenly?" I asked, in alarm?

"I think not suddenly."

"Still," I said, "there is a chance of her being restored to health?"

"Yes, there is a chance of it."

"If the worse happens," I said, "is it likely that she would recover consciousness before her death?"

"I cannot be certain on that point."

A Woman's Confession.

"Do you know, Mary, I once actually contemplated suicide?" "You horrify me, Mrs. B. Tell me about it." "I was suffering from chronic weakness. I believe myself the most unhappy woman in the world. I looked ten years older than I really was, and I felt twenty. Life seemed to have nothing in it worth living for." "Well, I was saved at the eleventh hour from the commission of a deed which I shudder to think of. A friend advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I did so. In an incredibly short time I felt like a new being. The Prescription cured me, and I owe Dr. Pierce a debt of gratitude which I can never repay."

Many of our aesthetic contemporaries are shocked at the return of the green postage stamps, but for our part we are always glad to welcome the green-back.

A Narrow Escape.

Mrs L. S. Pickerell, of Middlebury, Ind., had a very narrow escape from the insane asylum. For years she was subject to headache, palpitation, spinal pain, sleeplessness and nervous prostration. For three years she had convulsions, often as many as fifty a night. Able physicians failed to help her. At last after taking that wonderful remedy, Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for six weeks she was entirely cured. It is a recent discovery by one of the greatest of living physicians, and is working wonders. Trial bottle free at Baker and Hall's, Drug Store.

We had the pleasure of attending the entertainment last Tuesday evening given for the benefit of St. John's church at Clinton. The program consisted of music, both vocal and instrumental, and recitations. From the first selection to the last, it was an entertainment of superior merit. The eight hand galop fittingly opened the exercises, the quartette was finely rendered, and the "A. B. C." duet brought forth a hearty encore. The Squirrel Dance was nicely given and Mrs. Orton's recitation was worthy of a professional. The piano pieces were all finely executed. The Misses Henderson are beautiful singers and their aid, freely given to the ladies of St. John's Church, added much to the character of the entertainment. The recitation by Mrs. C. S. Burrows was a conquest in more senses than one. As a serious recitation it was the gem of the evening. Mrs. Chas. Clark's first ride in the elewater, brought down the house and elicited an encore. The people of Clinton showed their appreciation by crowding the hall.

The Christmas number of Scribner's Magazine is especially notable for its wealth of imaginative literature, both in prose fiction and narrative verse. There is a marked individuality, vigor, sincerity and beauty shown in the stories and poems, which have been enriched with an unusual number of illustrations, every one of which has been made from an original drawing by a skillful artist. These have been reproduced by expert wood-engravers. The result is that what is best in literature and art is represented in this number, which fittingly concludes the first year of a wonderfully successful magazine.

The funeral of Frankie Knight was held at the Universalist church on Monday afternoon, Dec. 12th, at 2 o'clock. Rev. Getchell spoke from the words given in the 42d Psalm and the 5th verse. Several floral pieces were sent in, indicating how he was esteemed by those who worked with him in the cigar factory of John Freeman. He was born in Adrian Jan'y 26th, '66, and met his death Dec. 9, '87. The attendance at the church was large. Our community is in sympathy with the parents, brother and sister and friends who deeply loved him and feel overcome at his sudden departure. Brewer's foundry was closed and the proprietors and laborers were present in behalf of the bereaved father who works therein. The young men of the cigar factory came in love and friendship for their late work fellow. The pastor's closing words to all were tender, fitting and comforting.

A ROUSING TEMPERANCE SPEECH.

[illegible] prayer by Mrs Mary [illegible] Scripture Reading by [illegible]

Mrs. H. W. Stewart presided and introduced the speaker. He began by saying that he had often heard the [illegible] men commented [illegible] a good opportunity [illegible] to show it, when [illegible] standing. A few moments [illegible] in procuring [illegible] who were standing but [illegible] to provide for all.

The Gov. then launched out into a powerful speech in favor of prohibition. It was the strongest argument on that side of this controversy that has been given in Tecumseh, except perhaps the effort of John B. Finch last summer.

If I was a preacher I would see that no man who stood by the saloon by his vote should sleep in my church on Sunday. This book (picking up the Bible lying on the stand) is a sure guide to show us how to live. The rules of conduct here laid down are taught in North School children alone but for all, the millionaire and laborer, white and black, for God's people everywhere. When the judgment day shall come if we have nothing better to offer than the fact that we may have voted the Democrat, Republican, or Prohibition ticket, I fear we shall not fare very well. The question to be answered then will be: What have we done for humanity? If the liquor traffic protects our boys, lifts men up and makes our homes happier, we should uphold it. But if this traffic destroys our boys and corrupts our homes, if it ruins all who come under its influence, then should we cry out against it and spare not. This is a free country, I know. Every man has a right to belong to whatever party his conscience dictates. I would abuse no man, not even the saloon-keeper; the saloon is as pure as the law which sanctions it, and the law is as pure as the men who make it. Your Christianity is no purer than your politics. Go to the fountain head and make good laws.

In 1889 constitutional prohibition was carried in Kansas by 8000 majority. It would carry to day by 100,000. I do not know a man in my town who would now vote for license. Under our law, a few weeks ago, a man in Topeka was convicted on 268 counts and fined $29,800. Could you convince him that prohibition does not prohibit? A government permit is worth nothing. The recent decision of the Supreme Court is a glorious victory for prohibition. They told us that prohibition would ruin the state. In 1880 our assessed valuation was 160 millions. In six years it had increased to 330 millions. Wouldn't you Michigan people like to be ruined in the same way? In Kansas they build 2½ miles of new railroad per day. With the same force in Colorado, they build 12 miles in 13 days. These are some of the business benefits of the law. The Supreme Court declared that the liquor traffic was the greatest source of crime. They would not let me come to Michigan last spring because I did not belong to the old parties, but I know Michigan is right at heart. Do they sell liquor in Kansas? Yes; but we can convict a man of selling as easily as we can convict a horse thief. Not one tenth as much liquor is now consumed as formerly under the old system. But why have a third party, you ask? In 1840 you organized a party for freedom. In 1856 you started the Republican party. Why? Because slavery existed outside of Michigan. We have the same reason to-day for starting a third party that the Republicans had 30 years ago.

The speaker here gave some statistics, showing the vast sum expended for liquor compared with the amount paid for schools and churches. People would scarcely believe them unless they knew them to be true.

I left the majority and joined the minority for the sake of principle. I commenced that way in 1856 and I do not feel out of place now. Every Christian man should read Blaine's interview. He classes tobacco as a necessity, would take the tax off tobacco and leave it on blankets. Put whiskey on its merits and it would not live an hour. The Republicans are afraid and the Democrats don't want to. This is the situation. Honest temperance men, who regard this question as of paramount importance, have no other alternative but a third party. Rise above your party prejudices; work and vote for prohibition.

THE N. D. FARMERS' CLUB.

Wednesday evening, Dec. 7th, this Club met at the residence of J. Q. Updyke, with a good attendance. A "stock exchange" was inaugurated into the workings of the club; that is, any member has stock or anything to sell or wishes to purchase, he has the privilege of making it known after the miscellaneous business is transacted. A member gave notice of having stock for sale and each time some one present wished to purchase such stock, thus showing its workings immediately.

The question—Which pays best to break up sod every year for corn or plant a field a number of years—was opened by James Updyke Jr.: An old land is capable of giving you much food and much profit for labor, but for him not a very expensive corn raiser for the reason old land is better adapted to some other crops, although have raised good crops of corn in favorable seasons. I think corn best adapted of any spring crop to sod, and cut worms do not harm me on sod any more than wire worms on new ground. What applies to one farm on this question does not to another.

Fay DePuy—Sod well manured, keep corn clean, is my plan.

A. Welch—Clover sod, but no timothy sod for me. Successive planting on some ground causes it to become hard. Corn wants mellow soil.

O. P. Remington—My experience is, that timothy or blue grass sod is best, plant one year; plow shallow to hasten the crop along. Know of a piece that has been planted 56 years.

B. Hurry—Plant only once on sod. Successive planting causes the ground to become weedy.

W. B. Keyser—If you have a farm that is all corn land, plant sod in regular rotation, but if you have only part good corn land, I think best to plant the same field for successive seasons, say 5 or 6 years; do not believe in planting common land better adapted to some other crop, have had as good corn on new ground as on sod.

H. Wilson—I think we have got to quit raising timothy or corn, as timothy causes the land to become wormy and is a very hard crop on land; plant a clover sod every time.

M. G. Updike—The best corn I ever raised was on a timothy sod and the poorest on clover sod, but the worms worked bad on this.

Mr. Poucher—Clover sod for me; no timothy.

H. Hoag—Clover sod I think holds moisture longer in a drought, consequently better for corn.

Club adjourned to meet at Allen Wells, on Wednesday evening, Dec. 21st.

CHRISTMAS OPENING OF WRIGHT, KAY & CO.

Christmas openings in the various leading stores are nothing new to the people of Detroit, but it couldn't be truthfully said that there is nothing new in Wright, Kay & Co's Christmas opening this year. To a lover of art and the beautiful their store presents a picture for the eye to feast upon.

Diamonds, watches, silverware and pottery all combine with plants and festoons of evergreens artistically draped to make the dazzling display that greets the visitor at their store.

In their watch department containing over 500 gold watches, one of the firm's specialties, can be seen the celebrated "non-magnetic" watches, of peculiar value to railroad men. Never before have Detroit people had an opportunity of seeing together so many beautiful diamond settings as are displayed by Wright, Kay & Co., many of which are designs of their own. The diamond necklace which at a recent prominent wedding attracted so much attention was purchased at Wright, Kay & Co's and contained 23 large diamonds, of which the aggregate weight was 20 karats. Opals, emeralds, sapphires, pearls are all used in necklace pendants, which are becoming very fashionable, and many designs unique and beautiful are displayed. The show case containing the display of solid gold and silverware attract their share of attention, there being in spoons, knives and forks alone 18 full patterns. In the pottery department 100 dozen plates bewilder the eyes with their varied and beautiful patterns, embracing the Worcester, Crown Derby, Havilland faience, Sevres, Carlport and other wares.

The cups, fish nets, etc., combine to make this department the most complete pottery display in the city.

Clocks without number, large and small, are displayed on the second floor. A small idea of their variety can be obtained from the fact that the prices range from $7.50 to $475. A portion of the same floor is devoted to bronzes and a collection of elegant French Standard Lamps.

Words, however, fail to give an adequate description of the store, and it will pay every one to visit Wright, Kay & Co., and inspect their beautiful Christmas display.—Detroit Evening News, Dec. 9, 1887.

CONGRESS, ONCE MORE IN SESSION AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

Carlisle Again Holds the Gavel in the House—He Speaks a Word for Free Taxes—The Senate Ready for Business Without a Ripple Over New Members—Daily Proceedings in Brief.

WASHINGTON CITY, Dec. 3.—The two houses of the Fifty-fifth congress were called to order Monday at noon and in a few hours both were organized and ready for business and the president notified of the fact. The galleries of both chambers were crowded with spectators, among whom in the senate were the foreign diplomats and Mrs. Cleveland, and several lady guests. The desks of many senators were covered with flowers, the finest noticeable being that of Senator Daniel, of Virginia, which was literally buried in floral offerings, and that of Kalbfleisch, which supported a magnificent floral harp given by a Louisiana plantation. In the house flowers were not nearly so numerous.

Legislative, executive and judicial officers of the senate, called that body to order at noon and presented credentials relating to new senators, which were read. With the certificate of Faulkner of West Virginia was a protest from the privileges and elections committee. The new senators were then sworn in, groups of four, Hoar objecting to the swearing in of Faulkner, which was therefore omitted, Hoar stating that the privileges and elections committee would consider the case without unnecessary delay. Turpie of Indiana took the oath without objection, but a protest was made by Hoar and the papers referred to the privileges and elections committee.

All the new senators' cases having been disposed of a committee was appointed to inform the president that the senate was ready to receive any communication he had to make, and the senate adjourned for the day.

DR. A. FRASER'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it is visited stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

WHAT IT CURES.

If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

SENSATION IN PEORIA.

Arrest of a City Official for a Seven-Years' Old Murder.

PEORIA, Ill., Dec. 14.—The sensation was caused here Wednesday evening by the arrest of Hartman Plaag, the marshal of South Peoria, who was indicted by the grand jury for the murder of his father-in-law, John Colditz, on the evening of Jan. 6, 1880. Plaag was lodged in jail without bail. Col-

[illegible] shot through his heart, and the instrument with which the deed was committed was found within three feet of him. The coroner's jury at the time of the murder was adjourned from day to day, finally bringing in a verdict of murder by unknown parties. Now, after the long lapse of time, Plaag's sister-in-law, Mrs. Becker, and a Mrs. Weiss, come forward and swear that Plaag killed his father-in-law; that they witnessed the deed, but were so much in terror of Plaag that they swore falsely at the inquest. Plaag, who was seen at the jail Tuesday morning, says this sister-in-law swore as she did and secured his indictment because of an unsuccessful attempt to blackmail him, she having some years ago threatened to bring suit against him for seduction, unless he paid her $800, which he refused to do.

HEARTRENDING TRAGEDY.

SEVEN OUT OF A FAMILY OF NINE ROASTED ALIVE.

HURON, Dak., Dec. 13.—A terrible tragedy occurred fourteen miles from Wessington, this county, late Saturday night. Wessington is a small town of perhaps 300 people, located on the Chicago & Northwestern road, fourteen miles west of Woolsey and about thirty miles west of Huron, and is in the center of a very rich farming district, settled by thrifty agriculturists. Among these was Michael Harris, who located fourteen miles north of the town several years ago, and by diligent labor has improved his farm until it has become very valuable, and he had come to be looked upon as one of the well-to-do settlers. Mr. Harris' family consisted of himself, wife and seven children, the eldest of whom was a girl aged 15 years. Saturday night the wind was blowing stiffly from the north, and it was bitterly cold. The family retired, leaving a brisk fire of soft coal burning in the stove in the sitting-room. About midnight Harris was awakened by smoke that had filled the room occupied by himself, his wife and baby, a few months old. He sprang from the bed and attempted to rouse his wife, who was probably unconscious, and after dragging her from the bed he was so overcome by the smoke that he fell to the floor, and, in a half dead condition, made his way through the kitchen and into the yard, where he fell unconscious in the snow.

The oldest daughter, who slept up-stairs, jumped from a window in her night clothes and found her father lying in the snow. The house was by this time in flames, and the poor girl in her frenzy endeavored to arouse her father from his stupor, not thinking of the unfortunate inmates of the burning dwelling. When she had succeeded the flames had so far destroyed the building as to make it impossible to save any other members of the family. Maddened beyond control by the thought of his wife and children being consumed by the flames, the husband and father essayed to dash into the burning building, but he was prevented from doing so by his daughter, who clung to his legs and fought desperately against his doing so. The maddened man beat her and tried to tear away, but the half-crazed girl prevented him from doing so, and the house and its seven occupants were burned to ashes.

The daughter ran through the cutting wind and snow in her night clothes two miles to the nearest neighbor and gave the alarm. When the neighbors reached the scene of the holocaust the father was wandering around the smoldering pile wringing his hands and calling on the names of his dear ones. He was taken to a neighbor's house and cared for. He recovered from his exposure sufficiently to tell his experience. The daughter is nearly wild with grief. It is feared that she caught from a distinctive line.

Eighteen Thousand Out.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Dec. 14.—The only flint glass works which the strike did not close Saturday was that of Atterbury & Co. The strikers finished their work at 11 a. m., and by noon had received the wages due them. At the request of Atterbury & Co their men are to continue work at the old scale, or until a new one is formulated and accepted by the strikers. The strike includes sixty flint glass factories, and will throw 18,000 men out of employment.

TOO UTTALY UTTA.

I'm called an esthetic young man,
And wude people say I am silly;
I carway a wose and a fan,
And dine on the scent of a lily;
I'm touched with the twie a twac cwaze,
A plaquo sets my heart in a flutta,
I'm sweet and wefined in my ways—
In fact, I'm decidedly utta;
Yes, utta;
In fact, I'm decidedly utta.

I dwess in a picturesque style,
My costume is simple and soulful;
My face weaba an esthetic smile
That's half idiotic, half doleful.
I've nothing in common with those
Wude people who spwing from the gutta;
But that's too absurd to suppose—
I'm quite too decidedly utta;
Yes, utta;
I'm quite too decidedly utta.

I wising I pwactice awhile
In fwont of my mirwow each mawning,
To catch the expwession and smile
That ignowant people are scawning.
And when through the city I pass
I set the gurls' hearts in a flutta;
Though some of them call me an ass,
What mattahs it while I am utta?
Yes, utta!
What mattahs it while I am utta?

Veritable Black Art.

He Wanted a Pie Eater.

He was courting a mission girl and had been invited to dine with the family on Sunday. He noticed that his adored one did not eat much, and remarked to her that her appetite was light.

"O, yes, Mr. Yardcash," replied the fair one, "I am not a large eater. Ma says I cost less to keep than any of her children."

"You'd orter seen her stuffin' down pie and cheese afore dinner," said her young brother. "She's giving you guff."

The lady of the house arose in her place, and, looking the young man full in the eyes, said firmly: "Mr. Yardcash, my daughter told you the truth. She is not a large eater. Her brother, John Henry, has been reading the funny papers and thought he would try a joke on us. His father will have the kindness to attend to him upstairs. My son must not grow up to be a liar."

"Why, ma," ejaculated John Henry, "didn't I hear you tell Tillie to eat a good lunch and not give her appetite away before her young man?"

"No, my son, you did not"——

Five seconds later boyish screams were heard from an upper room.

"Ma," said Tillie suddenly, "it's a shame to whip that boy. He told the truth, and I won't see him whipped for all the dry goods clerks on Kearney street—that I won't," and she flounced from the room, while Mr. Yardcash remarked to her mother: "It's a bad policy for a mother to meddle with her daughter's affairs. If you think I want a slim waisted, consumptive faced wife you are away off. Let her eat."—San Francisco Post.

He Started.

A rag peddler who was driving up Gratiot avenue yesterday had reached Hastings street when his horse balked. The usual number of smart Alecks were soon on hand with their advice, and one suggestion after another was tried in vain. The horse could neither be pulled nor pushed, and as he was blockading traffic the crowd began to grow very rapidly.

"What is it?" inquired a boy of 12 who pushed his way into the circle.

"Balky horse," answered some one.

"Where's the owner? Here, you man, can't you start this horse?"

"No, he don't start oop."

"Wait a minute."

The lad ran up the street half a block and pulled a handful of hay out of a bale at a feed store, and when he returned he cleared a space in front of the horse, stood off about five feet and extended his hand. The horse pricked up his ears, his eyes glistened, and he at once advanced and followed the boy around the corner.

"It's according to the hoss," explained the boy as the crowd cheered. "When a hay fed hoss balks he wants firecrackers under him; when a hoss who is fed on scrap iron and gravel roof balks, a pinch of hay will lead him all over town."—Detroit Free Press.

Fancy and Realism.

Little Nell—Mamma, I wish you'd let me read a novel.

Omaha Mamma—Don't mention such a thing.

"But novels tell things just as they are in life, don't they?"

"Yes. Now ask no more questions."

"Susie Minks is got such a lovely novel, and"——

"What? Did you read any of it?"

"Only the last line. It said: 'And so they got married and were happy ever after.'"

"Oh, that isn't a novel, dear, it's a fairy story."—Omaha World.

A Minnesota Compliment to Browning.

There is a very breezy young lady of literary tastes living on Summit avenue, who thought the acme of her desires had been attained when she was introduced to Charles Dudley Warner, who has been paying us a visit. After clasping his hand she commenced the conversation with the inquiry:

"Oh, Mr. Warner, don't you adore Browning?"

Mr. Warner murmured in reply that the section of country he came from thought something of the mystic poet.

"We," she continued, with much emphasis, "think that he scoops the whole lot."—St. Paul Globe.

WHAT THE CEREALS BRING.

A Comparison of Prices for Wheat, Corn, Etc., During Several Years.

WASHINGTON CITY, Dec. 13.—The December statistical report of the department of agriculture relates mainly to farm prices of agricultural products. The average value of corn is 43.8 cents per bushel against 36.6 last year and 32.8 in 1885. In 1881 it was 63.8 cents when the estimated product was 1,194,916,000 bushels. The difference is largely due to a general depression of values. The prices respectively in 1881 and 1887 are 61 and 48 in Ohio; 60 and 45 in Indiana; 58 and 41 in Illinois; 44 and 34 in Iowa; 65 and 37 in Missouri, 58 and 37 in Kansas, and 39 and 30 in Nebraska.

The average value of wheat is 69 cents, only 3 mills higher than the average last year. It is 82 cents in New York, 81 in Pennsylvania, 74 in Michigan, 73 in Ohio, 73 in Indiana, 70 in Illinois, 64 in Wisconsin, 62 in Missouri, 61 in Iowa and Kansas, 59 in Minnesota, 53 in Nebraska, and 52 in Dakota.

The average for oats is 30.7 cents, as against 29.8 cents last year. Barley averages 52.2 instead of 43 last year. Buckwheat, 56.4 cents, or 1.7 cents higher than last year.

The value of potatoes in greatly enhanced, being 68.5 cents, against 45 last year. It is higher than for seven years, except in 1881.

The value of hay is much increased. It averages $9.34 per ton, against $7.36 last year. The advance has been in the drought area of the west.

ARENSDORF GOES ACQUIT.

The Jury Decides That He Did Not Kill Haddock.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, Dec. 10.—The jury in the case of John Arensdorf, on trial for the second time on the charge of murdering Rev. Haddock, brought in a verdict Friday night at 9 o'clock, finding the defendant not guilty.

The court room was about half filled with a crowd which which was swiftly gathered, as the news of the agreement of the jury spread. There was a slight demonstration in the court room, but four out of five of the spectators refused to join in it. As soon as the verdict was announced Arensdorf's counsel moved for his discharge, and the motion was granted. The defendant's counsel grasped his hand, but he hurried away from them to thank the members of the jury, who had been dismissed by the court. It is safe to say that this verdict finally and forever disposes of the Haddock murder case, and that the man who actually fired the shot will never be punished in the world.

Berry Declines the Call.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 13.—Rev. Lyman Abbott preached in Plymouth church Sunday morning, and at the close of the services read the following cablegram from Rev. Dr. Berry, from Wolverhampton, England, declining the call to become Mr. Beecher's successor: "Charles Albert Berry greets Plymouth: Appreciates its confidence; reciprocates its affection; prays for its prosperity, but can not accept the pastorate. Home claims inexorable. Duty here commands. Letter mailed. God bless and guide you." The decision of Dr. Berry caused great disappointment.

The Parisian's Business Day.

The first thing that strikes an American business man in Paris is the remarkable manner in which French hommes d'affaires spend their business day. It is [illegible] plishes more in a few minutes on any of desk work than his English or American cousin does in a day. The Parisian certainly believes in the early worm, for he is at his desk promptly at 8, sometimes [illegible] frequently grant interviews at 6 in the morning. At about midday (then the most important event in the life of the Parisian—breakfast. As most merchants live some distance from their offices this meal is generally taken at the cercle or club.

Every Frenchman belongs to a club, and when the head of the house leaves for his particular cercle his clerks follow suit to a more favorable return, and the office is left to the tender mercies of the porter or concierge. This breakfast at the cercle is a fairly choice affair of several courses and occupies an hour. A stroll on the boulevard is next in order, a wish to the Salle des Depeches, a vermouth at the cafe and a perusal of the morning papers. About 3 o'clock the clerks come in one by one, and by 4 business is in swing. At 5 the carriage calls for the head of the house—it is time to drive to the Bois. The juniors leave shortly afterwards, those who can afford it taking cabs for the daily tour to the Cascade and those less fortunate sit in the open air at one of the numerous cafes on the boulevards or avenue des Champs Elysees, sip their absinthe and watch the carriages go by. The business day is finished.—Paris Cor. New York World.

Dangers of the Boxing Glove.

It is a mistake to suppose that the boxing glove is less injurious to the person with whom it comes in contact than the bare fist is. The fist cuts, but the glove stuns like a sand club or a piece of lead pipe, and is more apt to produce congestion of the brain and other internal injuries. No prizefighter was ever hurt by letting him bleed, and on the other hand he may be seriously injured by the muffled blow that produces the jar without breaking the skin. Moreover, these glove contests have brought in the fashion of matching second or third rate men against first rate ones, the bets being made on the question as to the number of rounds during which the former can contrive to hold out against the latter. What earthly sense or profit can there be in such a performance as that?

Of course the boxing glove has its use, like the button on the foil; it enables the pupils to learn the rudiments of the science—how to assume the proper positions, and how to use his arms. Gentlemen who move in polite society cannot afford to go about with faces scarred, seamed and discolored; it is not the fashion, and fashion must be considered. But I would banish the glove from everything in the shape of an "exhibition," whether amateur or professional.—Julian Hawthorne in The Cosmopolitan.

Ominous Peacock Plumes.

You remember, do you not, how all of the ladies used to admire peacock feathers? Every boudoir contained a bunch of them; every parlor was made richer by their gorgeous tints. They were even used now and then as a border to a frieze, and they were fastened on screens, painted on plaques, pinned on curtains, and embroidered on chairs. But now, go where you will, you will see no peacock feathers. They are banished from hall and bower. Why? Because it has been decided that they bring bad luck. Even fashion couldn't stand against that. They had to go. The news spread rapidly, and every lady, sitting down to reckon up the beginning of her bad luck, concluded that it was when she bought her peacock feathers. The ladies of the Woodruff hotel held a meeting and decided to banish these ominous plumes. So they all went. All along the avenues the ladies followed their example. The servants caught the infection and refused to stay in a house where the exquisite but fateful feathers were kept. So the comfort and peace of mind of the vainest of birds is restored, for he will be molested no more.—Chicago Tribune.

Hydahs of Queen Charlotte's Island.

These people have a novel way of hunting birds, using instead of a bow and arrows, a peculiarly shaped harpoon. This instrument is about five feet long, the point being made of a piece of walrus tusk ten inches long. The stick is of cyprus and about half way up three fish bones are arranged around the stick, these points extending outward in order to stick the bird in case the point on the end should miss. This harpoon, when used, is held in the left hand. In the right is a paddle of hard wood eighteen inches long, on the face of which is a groove extending almost to the end. The tip of the harpoon is fitted into this groove and then the weapon is thrown with double force. The native can strike a fowl in water fully 100 feet distant. A hunter usually carries with him a number of these harpoons of various sizes.—New York Mail and Express.

Tree Planting in Belgium.

A foreign paper gives the official report of the head officer having charge of woods and rivers in Belgium, from which it appears that the total length of highways in that country amounts to 4,227 miles, of which there are already planted more than one-half, or 2,417 miles, with 264 miles yet to be planted. The present value of the trees is now four times as much as their original cost, or have a money value of more than $2,000,000. Among the trees thus planted elms are in the largest numbers, then oaks, next poplars, and in diminishing numbers are ash, beech, maples, Norway spruce and larch. Fruit trees are in much smaller numbers.—Chicago Times.

Horses and Bulls Fighting.

In England conflicts between horses and bulls are not uncommon and are usually disastrous to the horses. A fiery colt often chases cattle in the pasture, biting them as they run; but when he tackles a bull the latter usually won't run, but charges the colt broadside and often kills him. Having come off best once, the bull thereafter is apt to charge horses that are grazing quietly. It is never safe to leave any bull in a pasture with horses.—London Live Stock Journal.

Dread of Originality.

But it is not simply at the height of national existence that this impulse for self preservation responds to the mandatory of lower life. You will observe its operation in our social customs and common propensities, for it is a fact that not anything is more dreaded or shunned by average human beings than originality—that is, unlikeness to others. It has always been dangerous. It is even yet likely to secure for its possessor a great deal of annoyance.—"Our Heredity from God."

IN A BIG BAKERY.

AN INQUISITIVE REPORTER SPENDS A NIGHT WITH THE PROPRIETOR.

A Crowd of Men, Women and Children in Front of a New York Bread Making Establishment—Manufacture and Distribution—Sponge, Dough and Flour.

A laughing crowd of men, women and children swayed in front of a bakery on East Seventy-third street the other afternoon. Nearly all carried covered baskets on their arms. Occasionally a little fellow conveyed a blow over the head from a basket for crowding some one older than himself.

When questioned concerning the cause of the excitement the proprietor said: "We supply almost every restaurant in the city with fresh baked bread. All that is left over during the preceding day we take back and give a fresh loaf in exchange. When it is returned to the bakery we sell it to these poor people at three cents a loaf. It is fully more wholesome than when fresh from the oven, and sold at eight cents a loaf. The stale bread is always in demand, and we generally see every woman around here when the supply is short."

The proprietor then invited the reporter to spend a night with him in the bakery. He led the way through aisles of loaf bread piled six feet high. There were all kinds of bread in these piles, from the long Vienna and long French baseball bats to the chubby loaf of rye.

"We make thirty two different kinds and styles of bread, and ten different styles of rolls," said he. "They are baked in six huge ovens, having a capacity of 10,000 loaves an hour. Our reel oven is the largest and only one of its kind in the country. It is two stories high and about thirty feet square. It contains a large turbine wheel, on which the kneaded dough is placed. As the wheel revolves the bread remains upright. Twelve hundred loaves are baked in this huge oven every forty-five minutes."

In the basement of the bakery clouds of flour dust nearly choked the spectator. The forms of busy men, arrayed in white, could be seen through it. Over the long troughs the workmen were leaning, dashing the flour to and fro, and mixing the dry with the wet flour until all in the trough was pure dough. Caldrons of ferment stood ready to make stock yeast. Sponge into dough was converted and the loaf was ready to bake.

After being baked the loaves were piled in such a manner that they could be easily counted by two men who began work at 9 p. m. and worked all night. These men fill the orders of the drivers, who deliver to the customers early in the morning.

At 11 p. m. the men were re-enforced by ten more bakers. The rapidity with which flour was changed into dough was surprising. Barrel after barrel was turned into the long troughs and quickly handed over to the men at the oven, who took charge of it until it was ready for baking.

Each of the forty men in the establishment works eleven hours only. Some work during the day one week and at night the following week. Bench men are paid $14 per week and oven men $17 per week. The place is never idle and the fires are never drawn. Nothing short of an earthquake could check the current of the staff of life which flows from the bakery.

About forty-five barrels of flour are used daily. The empty barrels are headed up and sold to coopers for 20 cents apiece.

"Over 2,500 loaves of rye bread a day are baked here," said the proprietor. "It took two years of experimenting to produce the right flavored rye bread, but today we make the handsomest fifteen inch, two pound loaf you ever had your eyes upon."

"Do you supply families?" asked the writer.

"Not directly," was the reply. "Families now buy their bread from grocery stores, and we supply the grocer. There is no money supplying families direct, and the bakers who have tried it have failed. Our wagons carry from 750 to 800 loaves a trip, which they deliver instead of two hours. It would take a day and a half to deliver that number at private houses."

"What is your head yeast or ferment?" asked the writer.

"Head yeast is the source from which ferment is obtained for making stock yeast. The ingredients of head yeast are hops and malt and water and flour. These are the only ingredients we use, although some use porter and sugar instead of malt. Great care is taken in the making of yeast, and none but the oldest and best glutinous flour ought to be used. Weak flour would produce feeble yeast, and unsatisfactory bread would be the result.

"Stock yeast is so called," he continued, "because it is the stock or supply of yeast used in making the sponge. It is simply a continuation of the ferment. Potato ferment is also used by us. Its ingredients are flour, water, head yeast and potatoes. The bread made with it will not dry out as quickly as bread made with yeast. Bread ordinarily weighs five-sixteenths heavier than the flour it contains, the excess being water.

"The sponge is a mixture of flour, water and a fermenting substance of some kind. When mixed with the dough it ferments the entire mass, rendering it porous, spongy and elastic. Sponge is also made to test the fermenting quality of the yeast without using all the flour. To make the dough you work the sponge with such quantities of flour, water and salt as will give the proper consistency to the baked bread. If the dough is too thin the gas will escape too rapidly, the raising will subside too early and the bread will be damp, heavy and sour to taste and smell. If the dough is too thick [illegible] if too little water has been used [illegible] fermentation will be slow. If too much it may [illegible].

"Every kind of flour requires treatment peculiar to itself to give the best results. We often waste hours and quantities of it in experimenting. The best of the best qualities of flour often fail to make good bread when insufficiently kneaded, because the water is too slow to combine with it. Other flours, whether kneaded much or little, will absorb water, make a strong dough, and produce a strong bread."—New York Evening Sun.

Run of the "Racy" Novels.

Every day sees some new novel issue from the press, and chronicles the plunge of yet another aspirant for literary fame into the crowded arena to swell the lengthy list of authors. It is a sign of the times that what are termed "racy" novels are the most run after by the fiction reading public, and consequently those most readily accepted by certain publishers. In this money getting, money grubbing age some publishers and authors seem to have met on common ground in pandering to a vitiated public taste, and producing books which will not bear the test of being read aloud in the home circle.—Chambers' Journal.

Influence of Nitrous Oxide.

It was the first and only time I ever out will have been the second. The rubber bag was attached. I lay back in the chair, composed. The mouthpiece was applied. The first sensations of the gas were peculiarly peculiar. You know how once, I became an [illegible] and was placed in one of the largest of siege mortars. It was before Yorktown. The mortar was rammed with a terrific, to one's ear, ning report. The shell—that is I—was fired aloft with the velocity of a well cast streak of lightning. I felt myself flying through the heavens above. The fuse burned. I was not an "a starring star," but "what goes up must come down." I reached the highest possible altitude and, making a graceful curve, plunged, tender second. I was about to burst. I felt the fire of the fuse as it burned down to the iron shell. I was descending as rapidly as I had gone up. "Why did I not burst?"

Still downward, downward, downward I rushed, until I felt I should strike the ground without bursting—a terrible calamity. I felt the fuse burn into the hole in the iron shell and thought, "Hurrah! Now I am going to burst." "No, I'll not burst." "But I cannot help myself." "I must burst." Then a feeling of "I don't care whether I burst or not" came over me, and I did burst into smithereens, with an intense feeling of relief as as I flew into tidbits and tenderloins. When I was relieved from the effect of the gas I found that the first pull the dentist had made he pulled the whole crown of the tooth off. That was when the mortar was discharged. Then he cut around the roots and I felt the sensation of soaring aloft. In the meantime the fuse burned. Finally the dentist affixed his instrument of torture and with one mighty effort severed my whole head from the roots of the tooth. The shell burst. The sensations were as real as though I had been a living bombshell, and yet were not unpleasant. There was a feeling of abandon about it all that was enjoyable. I experienced no ill effect.—New York Letter.

From Reporter to Editor.

No man, however, is thoroughly equipped and thoroughly qualified to fill the position of managing editor with justness and fairness to readers, as well as to workers, who has not done a reporter's work, and done it for years, in all its devious departments. I believe, too, that no experience is so well calculated to fit a man to do work upon the editorial page as that which the reporter does, though it is a notorious fact that the great body of editorial writers are ignorant of the experience which falls to the lot of the reporter. The editor's life, his absence of opportunities for contact with men—or rather for contact with all classes of men—many times result in his mistaking the proper position for his paper to assume. The life of the reporter is calculated to make him pre-eminently a man of the people, and to give him an insight into men and measures such as is found in no other department of newspaper work. Such success as is attained by the average editorial writer in nine cases out of ten comes from such vision as he may enjoy through the window of intelligence which the reporter may provide, and some men have a wonderful faculty of seeing well through the reporter's eyes.—J. N. Nind in The Writer.

Beware of the Wall Street Boxer.

Extremes proverbially meet, and the fact is exemplified anew in the love of boxing, which unites in a sort of fellowship the gentlemanly broker and the professional "bruiser." Many of the brokers in Wall street and elsewhere in New York are surprisingly proficient with the gloves. They take lessons from "professors," and from awkward novices who put forward their right "duke" as a guard they become dangerous antagonists who have learned to put up their left as a guard and to strike blows with their right which suggest those of a Roman battering ram. Some of them used to take lessons in fisticuffs in their elegant Wall street offices from broken nosed and broken down exmembers of the twenty-four foot ring at $5 a lesson and in time they became expert. Many of the brokers are members of athletic clubs and they use the gloves there. It is no longer safe for a bully to attack a well dressed gentleman, or even what is termed a dude, on the supposition that he cannot use his hands. Some of the roughs of the Sixth ward have had this momentous fact clearly demonstrated. —New York Cor. Washington Post.

How Miners Mix Their Drinks.

The queerest mixture of liquors that has yet been heard of in this section is prepared by the Slavs employed at the pipe works at Emaus. These people appear to be much given to feasting and conviviality, and in their own peculiar way at times enjoy themselves on a high scale. When a "spree" is agreed upon they purchase two kegs of beer, two bottles of rot gut whisky and a bottle of alcohol. A large washtub is then brought into their midst, and the beer, whisky and alcohol poured into it. After the stuff has been thoroughly mixed the Slavs gather around the tub, and with tin cup in hand drink until the last drop disappears. They then roll over and sleep until the effects have passed off, and they then get up and imagine they have had a glorious time. These "sprees" are generally taken on Saturday night, and Sunday is spent by the drinkers in bed. On several occasions the draining of the tub has ended in a general row. The tub containing the mixture is also used by the Slavs for washing various kinds of clothing.—Allentown Cor. Philadelphia Telegraph.

Died of Too Much Money.

A Boston man who, until he was 40, lived an economic, hardworking life, and one which was both happy and useful, had the misfortune at that time to inherit from a relative a fortune of some millions. He was instantly overwhelmed with importunities from all sides. Gifted with an acutely sensitive New England conscience he was not only anxious to do good with his wealth, but he was almost morbidly afraid that through ignorance or carelessness he should do harm with it. He investigated with the most painful care the cases presented to him and he literally agonized over the things he desired to do, that he feared to do and those that he was urged to do. Two years of this worry killed him. His physician said afterward that the certificate to be accurate should have been filled out to read, "Died of his money," and the statement would have been literally true.—Providence Journal.

CURES FOR INSOMNIA.

A LONG LIST OF REMEDIES FOR SLEEPLESSNESS.

Prescriptions of Various Physicians—A Student's Plan—Several Simple Remedies. How an Editor Found Relief.

It will be interesting to collect the many remedies that have been suggested for sleeplessness. A hot shower bath at bed time cleanses the skin and predisposes to sleep, it is claimed. The "one sure and safe way" is to take a brisk walk of a mile or two before going to bed, and then, after the walk, holding the head under a stream of cold water. This, however, should be done when the habit of sleeplessness first begins.

A business man with a mechanical turn of mind should fit up his attic as a carpenter's shop, and [illegible] supper. A walk of two or three miles a day is sufficient, says one writer, while another maintains that nothing will do but horseback riding. Again, relief for sleeplessness can be found by wetting a linen kerchief, folding it and placing it under the back of the neck, with a dry cloth under the kerchief to protect the pillow. Still again, warm the feet by friction, extra wrappers, etc., and cool the head, either in a draught, or with cold water or ice. One sufferer has palliated the distress of his vigils by leaving his bed, lighting a fire, and sitting in a chimney corner, reading and eating by turns, until the demon intimated a desire to depart.

A physician writes that the evening should be a period of relaxation and recreation, relief from care and anxiety to be found in cheerful conversation, pleasant games and light reading, while persons of sedentary occupation are to take plenty of open air exercise. A feeble circulation is to be overcome and cold feet are to be warmed. The stomach is to be attended to if the digestion is not good. If it is overloaded easy and refreshing sleep is impossible. Weakly persons and invalids often find a cup of hot broth or gruel or some other light and easily digestible food taken on retiring to be the best promotive of sleep. The bed should neither be too hard nor too soft, nor the clothing too abundant nor too scanty. All unpleasant sights, sounds and smells should be excluded. Regular and early hours of retiring are essential. No victim of insomnia can with safety burn the midnight oil or engage in evening dissipation. The man who observes these precautions and adds thereto a clear conscience and a sound mind has the promise of unfailing sleep.

A student, troubled with insomnia, discarded his feather pillow for one of hair with wonderful effect. The hair pillow does not get warmed up to an uncomfortable degree, because it rapidly conducts away the heat imparted to it by the head. The same person found that sleep could be brought on by simply warming the body, especially the feet, or by taking a walk, or by a cold shower or sponge bath, followed by rubbing with a coarse towel. Getting out of bed for a few minutes when the air was cool often brought relief. He had lain awake half the night, and then, after being up long enough to mix and drink a lemonade, had fallen asleep at once on going to bed. This student found that a light lunch just before going to bed relieved his brain by drawing the blood to his stomach.

Another victim of sleeplessness found that a continuous low noise favored sleep. The sound of water dropping on a pan has been prescribed by a physician. The explanation seems to be that a simple monotonous impression quiets the brain by occupying it, to the exclusion of more varied and interesting, and therefore stimulating, impressions. On the same principle are the devices of counting backward or forward, imagining sheep jumping one by one through a gate, etc., but they are open to the objection of causing one portion of the brain to be exerted in order to control the rest of it.

A man who has "struck upon the right plan at last," and who opens up to the world something that is calculated to make mankind rejoice and do away with all drowsiness, writes that all you have to do is to imagine yourself going on a long journey. Think over the details of it every night when sleep lags. The plan made him healthy and happy.

A physician has one simple remedy, which requires no medicine. Compose the mind as much as possible, and confine the thoughts to one subject, or a number on individual, and close the eyelids, rolling the eyes continuously in one direction. In a short time consciousness will be lost, and you will be in the blissful land of dreams. After an experience of two years, another man found that he was always able to go to sleep very shortly after retiring to rest by keeping his eyes looking down; he found that they turned up when he was sleepless and was cogitating something that kept him awake.

An editor finds relief by wetting a cloth with cold water and binding it across his forehead. Another plan is to draw in a long, slow breath by the mouth and to force the breath out through the nose, imagining that the currents can be seen. An attempt may also be made to read an amusing novel in bed or to repeat a familiar poem, but all study or serious reading should be stopped half an hour before going to bed. In a paper read by a physician before the Boston society for medical improvement he said that sleeplessness is often caused by starvation and that a tumbler of milk if drank in the middle of the night will often put people to sleep when hypnotics would fail of their purpose.—Good Housekeeping.

Ancient Peruvian Manufactures.

Peruvian woven tissues, often dyed in brilliant hues, are unsurpassed by the textile productions of any other ancient American people. Their jewelry of gold and silver is remarkable. Statuettes in the precious metals are even more wonderful; they represent monkeys, birds with their feathers, fish with their scales, etc., modeled in relief or intaglio. Human figures were also cast in the precious metals, the artists even attempting groups. Beads were made of gold, silver, glass and earthenware. Wood was used to furnish objects in daily use, and an example may be seen in the beautifully ornamented combs that are sometimes found placed beside the dead in the huacas.—The Swiss Cross.

Cotton Mills in India.

There are eighty-nine cotton mills employing nearly 75,000 hands in India. A noteworthy thing about these mills is that when trade is dull their owners are uniformly animated by an intense desire to avoid Sunday labor, but as soon as trade becomes brisk they would keep running eight days if there were that many in the week. These mill owners are of course Englishmen.—New York Tribune.

STORIES ABOUT MEN.

He Wanted to Buy a Jewsharp from Platt Evans.

Cal Thomas, who always has a good story to tell, has this one on Platt Evans, a stuttering debtor who was one of the early pioneers of Cincinnati: "In early days, says Cal, it used to be thought capital fun to send a countryman from store to store inquiring for the things he would be certain not to find at the places to which he was sent. One day a fellow came, as he had been directed, to a [illegible] merchant tailor. He was busy with a customer, as the man appeared, but, observing that several of the 'boys' had dropped in at the door just to see what Platt would do, he 'caught on' at once, and responded to the inquiry for the musical instrument, 'W-w-wait a min-ute.' Having served his customer, he picked up a pair of glove stretchers and approached the rural melodist with, 'Let-let me m-measure your m-m-mouth,' and, introducing the stretchers, manipulated them so as to transform the aperture into a horizontal yawn, awful to see, and capacious enough to hold a dozen jewsharps. Removing the apparatus, he examined it carefully and deliberately, as one might scrutinize a thermometer or a pocket compass, and then, addressed the unsuccessful hunter for jewsharps, as he said in a tone of well feigned disappointment: 'W-w-we, hain't gg-got any your s-size.'—Exchange.

What Kept Lincoln Awake.

During the darkest days of the war there was a squabble in Syracuse over the appointment of a postmaster. Two factions had candidates, and each had sent to Washington numerously signed petitions for the appointment of its favorite. Finally, to get the matter settled, a delegation composed of the wealthiest men of the town and several of the most prominent ministers and lawyers, headed by Gen. Leavenworth, visited the national capital and secured an audience with President Lincoln. Gen. Leavenworth had carefully prepared his speech to Mr. Lincoln, and it ran something like this:

"MR. PRESIDENT: It is with great reluctance that we intrude upon you this morning. We appreciate the awful responsibilities and perplexities of your position, and do not forget that the very life of the nation is in your hands. But, Mr. President, the people of the great loyal north are at your back, and they are praying, sir, that your life may be spared and that you may be given strength to carry this war through to a successful issue."

Mr. Lincoln listened to Gen. Leavenworth with some impatience until he reached this point, and then interrupted him with:

"I assure you, my dear sir, that it isn't the war or the arms that is worrying the life out of me; it is that Syracuse postoffice that is keeping me awake nights."

Gen. Leavenworth did not finish his speech. The delegation presented their case in the briefest manner, and felt more comfortable when they reached Pennsylvania avenue than they did in the presence of the president.—Philadelphia Press.

Sturdy John Marshall.

The descendants of Chief Justice John Marshall are a sturdy race. One of them, bearing the great jurist's name, owns a farm in Virginia and runs a saw mill thereon. He got down in the buzz saw pit not along ago to fix a loose screw. Suddenly he felt something moving behind him, and he threw his arm up and felt the saw cut right through about the elbow, almost from skin to skin. Raising his head he struck the saw, which cut a groove right through his hair, over his forehead, and face and down into his throat. When he was taken out his face was one mass of bleeding flesh. They laid him on the grass and brought a surgeon. While the latter was running across the fields to the spot where the men had left Marshall he heard his voice saying, as well as his wounds would permit: "Shove this stuff away from my eye so that I can see whether it's hurt." They did "shove the stuff" away from his eye as carefully as possible, and he gave them one ghastly glance and then murmured: "It's all right; I can see." It took the surgeon an hour and a half to dress all his wounds. He endured the pain with perfect composure. Within a month he was out again as well as ever. Some one was telling one of the old darkies on the place, while "Marster John" was still in bed, what a narrow escape he had had from death. "Huh!" said the darky, "take heap more than that to kill Marse John. Why, if you wanted to kill Marse John you'd have to cut his head off—and then hide the head."—Chicago Herald.

A Judge's Quick Repartee.

The following was perpetrated by a judge of one of our higher local courts, now off the bench, but whose identity will be instantly discovered by many lawyers without mentioning his name. On the first Monday of a term many jurors were as usual in line before him to present reasons for being excused from service. Among them was a very dirty, unkempt, shaggy bearded man, who, despite the efforts of the attendants to restrain him, insisted on advancing to the judge's desk a[illegible] speaking privately with him. The judge, noticing his importunity, signified his willingness to allow the talesman to approach, and then said to him somewhat sternly: "Well, sir, what is it?" The man leaned over the bench until his lips almost touched the judge's ear, and then whispered; "I've got the itch." The crowded court room was watching the result with curiosity. "Mr. Clerk," said the judge instantly, without the slightest change of expression; and in a voice painfully loud and distinct: "Mr. Clerk, he's got the itch. Scratch him."—New York Tribune.

A Peep at Joseph Chamberlain.

The Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain is one of the most peculiar of the thousands of peculiar folks who have feasted at Delmonico's great dining hall. He sat through the long dinner of the chamber of commerce on Tuesday night and listened to the flow of oratory and not the faintest indication of a smile or even interest flitted across his clear cut features. Secretary Fairchild tried to engage him in conversation, and Mr. Depew, his next neighbor, seemed disposed to make things pleasant for the stranger. Mr. Chamberlain, with his gold rimmed monocle stuck in his right eye, would show momentary interest in the courtesy of his two neighbors and relapse into his frozen state. He glared straight ahead like a soldier on dress parade. He spoke, of course, with an "English, yer knaw" accent, and in his speech of 2,000 words only two forlorn and unprotected periods were accommodated with standing room. It was a speech of commas.—New York Sun.

Mark Twain as a Lecturer.

The last time I heard him lecture, after having got rid of his hands, he stood before the house as stiff and silent as an unopened oyster. The audience was as still as he. After a long pause, during which every one was painfully wondering what ailed him, he said "H'm!" and immediately relapsed into silence. A full minute went by during which he remained perfectly quiet with his eyes staring straight before him. Then he said "H'm!" again. At last, some one started a little ripple of applause. Mark looked up, radiant with smiles. "Thank you," he said, "I was waiting for you to begin!"—New York Tribune.

DEACON BURDETTE'S PHILOSOPHY.

UNREQUITED DESIRE.

The man who wants the earth, my son, is the very man the earth doesn't want.

DOESN'T QUITE REACH THE SPOT.

A Hartford man has invented an apparatus for timing horses to a quarter of a second by electricity. That isn't exactly the invention that the owners of fast roadsters have been looking for. What is demanded by gentlemen who drive their own steppers is an apparatus that will give a six minute horse a [illegible]

RESISTANCE TO TYRANTS.

The weary traveler sat on the bed and read the legend on his door—"Guests must bolt this door before retiring." "I'm blowed if I will," he muttered hoarsely, as a man determined to resist imposition to the death. "It was all I could do to bolt what they set before me to the dining room." And slumbering lightly, he arose at early dawn, and jumped his bill like a true American.

UNCLAIMED BAGGAGE.

A "gentleman's son!" Well, my boy, when you find a man whose only claim to respectability and title to existence is that he is the son of a gentleman, you want to look for his name in the "Newark Peerage" before you can cash any checks for him. "Pinkerton's Peerage," paste it in your address book.

A WORD TO SOMNAMBULISTS.

A Boston writer, discussing the lost art of early rising, says "the proper time to rise is when sleep ends." That's a good thing to know. Do you know, if we hadn't seen that in a Boston paper, we should have gone right on believing that the proper time to rise was when you were right in the midst of your soundest sleep. What a blessed thing it is for this blind old world that there are some men in it who know nearly everything.

THE MYSTERY UNVEILED.

"My stars, man," exclaimed the traveler, who had stepped into the transfer office to look for a trunk that had been missing for two months, "but you do write fast! I never saw a steam engine get over ground so fast!" "Um," said the clerk, making the pencil and the tickets fly. "Can anybody read what you write?" "Nope." "Can you read it yourself?" "Nope." "What are you writing?" "Addresses for baggage t'be d'livered. Here, Sam! steen trunks 'n 'ty v'lises—'tyfi' hundn' four 'st t'ny f'th street, right 'way!" Traveler goes out without asking for his trunk, and when last seen was asking a man, from whom he had just bought a navy revolver, to show him how to load it.

THE VERGE OF BANKRUPTCY.

Delighted friend in Colorado hotel—"Why, why, why! George Jackson, if I ain't glad to see you! I heard that you were dead! What you doing way out here? When did you leave Ohio?" Stranger, with frigid politeness—"You have the advantage of me, sir; my name is Henry Mortimer and I never was in Ohio in my life." Then, suddenly melting, whispers: "Come this way, Sam. Don't say a word, old boy. I left Ohio between two days. I had three invitations to golden weddings, two babies named for me, two bids to silver weddings and four birthday invitations all in one week. So I had to put that notice of my death by drowning in the papers and skip. I'll lay low for a month and go back. Close call for ruin, wasn't it? Call me Mortimer, please."

A Choice of Evils.

Omaha Dame (looking up from the paper)—Dear me! Horrible!

Husband—Eh! Another disaster?

"No. The paper says that a colored barber in Philadelphia became so enraged because a customer had not the money to pay for the barbering he had done that he seized a razor and cut the retreating man horribly about the face and hands. The wounded man's nose was nearly severed from his face."

"Well, well! The poor man wouldn't have looked much worse if he had shaved himself."—Omaha World.

Seeing the Show at Home.

"John, I am afraid we can't go to the theatre any more," said a Chicago woman to her husband.

"No, I'm afraid we can't; money is getting very tight."

"I shall miss it dreadfully."

"So shall I."

"What shall we do?"

"I have it. We'll hang your hat on the back of Hale's chair and sit and look at it."—Merchant Traveler.

"Yes, Naomi, I am far from being happy."

"Confide in me, my dearest. Let me share your sorrow. Have the buffetings of this cruel world cast a gloom over your soul?"

"Well, not exactly, but you see these shoes are new and they pinch like thunder."—Lincoln (Neb.) State Journal.

The Lime Kiln Club.

"My attenshun," said Brother Gardner, as he carefully pulled down his vest, "has bin directed to de follerin' article in a Chicago paper:

"'Skipped.—The treasurer of the celebrated Lime Kiln club at Detroit has changed his postal address to Canada. He took over $7,000 with him and it is said the club is badly broken up. Let us have some philosophy from Brother Gardner on the subject of official honesty.'

"How dat report got abroad I doan' know," continued the old man, "but it was made outer hull cloth, as we all know. 'Dar sots our respected treasurer in his usual seat an' de funds of de club ar' safe in bank. Human foresight an' human hindsight hev dair weak pints, an' de day may possibly come when some sich item may be true in part. I may take de liberty of briefly explainin' to de meetin' fur de benefit of any suspishus member de modus operandi on which de finanshul system of dis club am conducted.

"Fustly—All de moneys received fur dues, payment of fines, etc., ar' counted three times ober by de three members of the finance committee. By dat time de figures are c'rect, an' all de bogus pieces sorted out to send to de furrein heathen. De sum ar' entered on three separate cash books, an' each member must check up de entry made by de odder.

"Secondly—De cash ar' den passed ober to Sir Isaac Walpole, Waydown Bebee, Elder Spooner an' myself. We recount it an' enter it on four mo' cash books.

"Thirdly—It den goes to de treasurer, who counts it again, makes anodder entry an' de five of us purceed to de bank an' deposit it. On de way down we keep a clus watch on each odder.

"Fourthly—Not a cent kin be drawed frum de bank widout I issue de check an' fo' older pussons sign it.

"Fifthly—When de treasurer of dis club so fur forgits hisself as to absorb $7,000 of our money an' cross de ribber it will be a cold day—cold 'nuff for two undershirts. It can't be dun, eben if he wanted to git his name up an' run fur some fat offis.

"Sixthly—As to any remarks on de subjick of offishus dishonesty, our feelin's ar' purty generally known. It ar' mighty few honest men who run fur any offis whar' dar' am a chance to steal. It ar' mighty few who could git offis if dey wanted it. Candydates fur fat offises, in dese days, ar' selected by various rings. Each ring wants a man it kin handle. Each ring gits dar. De fitness of a candydate as to honesty has no bearin' on de case. If he doan' turn out a thief or an embezzler befo' his term ar' up all people ar' surprised. If he does turn out, de public holds its bref to find out how many others ar' guilty as well, fur it understands dat he has not profited alone. When de honest men of dis kentry riz up an' insist wid deir ballots dat only respectable men shall hold offis, de great highway to Canada will be grass grown."—Detroit Free Press.

Just the Same.

It was on one of the ferryboats the other day. An old man, who seemed to have some trouble with his foot, pulled off his shoe in the presence of two scores of passengers, rubbed his heel for a moment, as he looked around, and then hobbling over to a motherly looking woman he asked:

"Ma'am, will you oblige me with the loan of a pair of pincers for a few seconds?"

"Pincers?" she gasped.

"Yes'm—want 'em to pull a peg out of my shoe. If you have a tack hammer, perhaps I can drive the infernal thing in."

"Why, my soul! but I haven't anything of the sort!"

"Haven't you? Well, it's all right, and you needn't feel bad about it. We are all careless critters, and I often come away from the house and forget my whetstone, wagon jack or gimlet. No excuses, ma'am—it's all right—all right."—Detroit Free Press.

Erroneous.

"Is that you, Charley?"

It was a beautiful night and the soft rays of the moon fell about the fair form of the speaker like a benediction.

The young man had come quietly from the gate and the slight noise he made in ascending the steps attracted the girl's attention.

"Great heavens!" he muttered to himself, "how I love that maiden."

"Is that you, Charley?" she repeated, in a low, sweet tone; "I'm so glad you came. Draw a chair from the parlor; it is lovely here in the moonlight."

But, alas! it wasn't Charley, it was George; and the cold wind whistled through his whiskers.—Life.

Returning Letters Was All Nonsense.

A Somerset business man not long since had occasion to write to a gentleman who evidently had few correspondents. The envelope had the usual "Return in ten days to ——, Somerset, Ky.," on it. In about ten days the letter came back to him, accompanied by a scrawling note, the writer saying that he had returned the letter according to the request on the envelope, though he "didn't see why he was so all fired particular about having it sent back."—Somerset (Ky.) BILL NYE AS A PLAYWRIGHT.

He Describes a New Opera of Which He Is the Author.

turned from a private rehearsal of a new operetta of which I am the author, and hasten

est criticism of it for the press. In this criticism I shall try to be perfectly frank to mention any defects, and yet I shall try to avoid hurting the author's feelings. I want to score the operetta with a merciless hand, and yet I do not wish to give myself needless pain.

The operetta itself is called "The Singed Cat," because it is really so much better than it seems to be. The music was composed partly by myself and partly by a count who plays on the ferryboats in summer and hits his winters to himself. He does not wish to have his name used, because, as he says, he is afraid that "foreign powers will get on to it and make him come back to Attica to the count business again." He says it is very disagreeable to be a count and live on a long, slim pedigree and what the neighbors bring in from time to time.

The orchestra opens the performance with a selection from the "Flying Dutchman." Difficult as it may appear, the orchestra makes a good selection from this gentleman, and it is played well after everything is ready. It takes some little time for an orchestra to get ready, however. The man who bites off the first joint of the clarionet breathes a few liquid notes, the first violin sounds "A" and the gentleman with the bassoon looks up into its dark recesses to see if any cayenne or kittens have been deposited there since he played last. The superintendent of the large violin stands it up on end and feels of its staccato. He then chalks his bow and the leader whispers in a low voice to the man who salivates the cornet. The snare drum soloist gets his assortment of drums into a semi-circle, hangs his triangle where he can get at it, runs his eye over the xylophone, sleigh bells, bird call, picket fence, bones, castanet, cymbals, Swiss bells and fortissimo. The leader writes his autograph in the atmosphere with his stick and the band goes into committee of the whole with a wild snort. A difficult piece then follows. Some of the audience are heard to state that they wish it had been so difficult that the orchestra could not have played it.

The curtain now rises, and a primary school of over 800 pupils is seen passing in review across the stage, singing a song of forty-nine verses, meantime going through a system of calisthenics. In making one night stands with "The Singed Cat," most any primary school will do with a few rehearsals for this chorus. Get these children secured in advance and all their parents will come to see how the children look on the stage. I thought of this myself.

THE SOPRANO.

A beautiful soprano now comes on, accompanied by her voice, and wonders where Felix is. She decides to sing a small song while waiting for him. The song is an arpeggio with diatonic scales on it. It begins low and fluttering, like the cry of a wounded clay pigeon, and gradually soars upward, like the price of coal, and ends with some artistic gargling which suggests a warble in the upper register.

As she gets more confidence in herself she becomes more irritated because Felix did not get there at the same time he said he would.

The prima donna of the "Singed Cat" has a pleasant voice, full of timbre and fine allegro movement, bordering on the andante. Mr. Riley, who has heard her, says that when she pulls out the last joint on her crescendo and opens her upper register, her mouth looks not unlike a stab in the dark. She sings with the whole arm movement, and her action is good as she goes by the judges' stand. She has a selection in the second act called "Back to Our Mountains," in which she starts off with a ritard in which she emits a chest note which tests the acoustics of the hall, that she is tickled to get back to her mountains, such as they are, and is pleased with the altitude. She has assisted in "The Damnation of Faust," but otherwise her conduct has been good. She is a widow, her husband being deceased. He was listening to the song of a buzz saw near Stillwater, Minn., in 1875, and got an idea that the saw had something confidential to communicate and desired to take him apart for that purpose. Anyway, he was in that condition when they found him. For that reason her music is frequently tearful and often solfeggio in spots. Her repertoire is very large and has a lid on it. The only criticism that I feel warranted in making, and I hate to do that, is that she has slightly ruptured her voice by trying several years ago to sing a duet with herself and thus draw two salaries.

When the applause has died away Felix comes in with a baritone voice and diminished triad. He thinks of the first verse while the piccolo makes a few desultory remarks, and then he explains how he could not get there when he agreed to because the jury disagreed, or something of that kind. He swallows an imaginary clam with the shell on it, and begins in a low, passe roundelay which develops into a duodecimo run. He is accompanied by a running mate, consisting of a flute with a large red mustache over the main entrance.

FELIX.

"The Singed Cat" will be produced at the Pole grounds early in January. Let there be a full house.—Bill Nye in New York World.

CHRISTMAS TURKEYS.

AS our reporter was straying along R. R. street yesterday he halted at the old Cummins Carriage Factory and found the building had been transformed into an extensive poultry dressing establishment. "What does this mean?" he inquired of the proprietor, Hannibal Osborn. MARRIED IN HASTE.

The night before my wedding day! Was ever night so full of hours? Were ever hours so full of dreary minutes, that seemed to travel after each other through the dead cold gloom?

[illegible] to-morrow. I had said it, I had not only said it, but I had said I should never repent.

As the early dawn breaks through the gloom of night I hear the old cock in the farm yard give a dismal hoot preparatory to his first crow to the new day.

And, utterly tired out, I drop asleep.

One—two—three—four—five—six—seven—eight beats out of the tall old clock on the stair head outside my door, and I jump wildly to my feet.

"At 9 o'clock, then," he had said.

I had only one hour—only one hour to be Norah Glennie.

By the time that clock struck 10 I should be Norah Mapleson—a wife, a true wife to a true husband.

I rearrange my dress with a feverish haste.

I only stop to drink a cup of milk ere I leave the house, only just in time to catch the train as it passes our country station.

I am in time.

Once more my hands are clasped in his.

We say no word; only hurry through the sleepy streets till we enter the dingy office where, by some strange method, we are made man and wife. All is a dream to me.

I wonder vaguely where are my bridesmaids, where are my father and mother? Bah! why of course they are dead long, long ago. I have only my old uncle, and he is lying bedridden at Norlington farm.

How could he be here? The only thing that seems real to me is the shining ring on my finger.

I look at it in a kind of fear as I draw my old kid glove over it before leaving the house into which Norah Glennie had gone a few minutes ago, and out of which now a white, startled woman was issuing—Norah Mapleson.

"Don't be so distressed, my darling! Don't look so or I cannot bear it!"

I draw a deep breath; I stretch out my hand, a little wildly, I suppose, for he takes it firmly in his and lays it on his arm as he hurries through the streets back again in the direction of the railway station.

Once more we are in the train.

"Mine—mine forever! I do not fear the future now!" is all my husband says, but there is a world of love in his eyes.

Poor William! In a week's time he will be on the ocean, and we will have parted for many months—perhaps years. He lets me rest quietly in his arms during the very short journey back again to Norlington. I get out of the train alone, as he is going on some business two stations further on; then he will come back for the rest of the week to the farm.

"Before you go into this room, wife, darling, you will take it off!" and he touches my finger, on which the bright new wedding ring glitters.

"I cannot!" I say, shuddering. "It is unlucky to remove a wedding ring!"

"But, my darling, his sharp eyes will"——

The train goes on, and I am alone. I see his face look at me from the window, alarmed and anxious; but I nod reassuringly and he smiles.

It causes no remark that I have been out so early this morning, for everything lately is so upset by reason of my uncle's illness and William's near departure.

Then, again, there is only old Betty in the kitchen, and perhaps she scarcely knows I have been out; and if the nurse who has been called in to attend my uncle knows, she, doubtless, thinks I have been into town on some household errand.

About my ring. I must hide it; but I cannot take it off. I hurry up into my room, and hurriedly turn over the contents of an old musty dressing case that had been my father's. Where can it be? That old garnet ring with the queer under groove in it that I feel sure will let this thin wedding ring slip into it and so keep my secret from prying eyes.

Ah! with hot, trembling fingers I find it. It does exactly as I thought it would do.

With that broad old ring always on, I need fear no discovery. None but myself would know that under it lay another, the tiny circlet of gold binding me stronger than iron bands could do to my "dear love."

During the day my old uncle is taken much worse and he will let no one be near him but me. William comes in and out of the room, but I am tied to it nearly all the day, till towards evening my uncle falls into a deep sleep and I can safely leave him with his nurse. It was a rambling old house, Norlington Farm, and it had been my only home now for nearly seven years, all of which time William Mapleson had lived as my uncle's steward and helper under the same roof.

It has been a hard, self-denying life for him, perhaps; but for me—or rather for his love for me—he would never have borne it. Till latterly the hard old man had never discovered our love; and when he had there was no more peace for us under his roof.

He had raged and stormed, declaring that no niece of his should marry William Mapleson, on pain of disinheritance.

Mine was always a weak, timid nature. Perhaps some women at was no longer a young girl; my 30th birthday had come and gone) would have actively resented his tyranny and asserted their individual rights. I could not. I was in his power; for when my parents died he had taken me in, a penniless girl, and had from that time given me, in his particular hard way, all that I needed to live—not but some would have felt they fully earned such keep.

I scarcely ever looked at it in that way. I had been weak and helpless, alone in the world, not very strong in health, when he had come to my father's funeral; and after paying all expenses, had simply said. "Now go and pack up your kit. You must come with me to Norlington Farm. Can't say, I'm sure, what old Betty will say, but there's nothing else, as I see, to be done. Remember, my girl, 'tis not a lady's life I am offering you, but I suppose you are not too fine a lady to know what work means?"

If I had been then, all was over. [illegible] by now. During these seven years I have worked [illegible]

Yet there are those who say that old Peter Glennie is worth half a million of money.

My golden week of happiness is [illegible] but although William is gone I am [illegible]

Let me [illegible] the step I have taken. Since the morning after my marriage, my uncle, had been worse, for hour that William and old Jenkyns had been called into the room to sign his name to some document, together with the hired men.

[illegible] she cry in my the same day. I suppose it is his will we signed. What a grudge he seems to have against matrimony, his goods continually [illegible] in his sleep about fools getting married.

"Ah," I said, "he has never married."

"No," she laughed. "I should hot say any one else [illegible] either."

He had rarely [illegible] at the moment, and I was left alone to overhear a conversation between old Jenkyns and Betty, who, being both deaf, were talking over the same matter in the kitchen.

"Ah, well, Betty, it's a hard day for the farm when Mr. William goes away, and how'll the old master do wi' a new steward at his time o' life, I wonder?"

"He knows what he's about, never you fear. Do'ee think for a moment as how he don't know a-letting him go is the ony way o' preventin' a marriage between he and Miss Nora? Ha! ha! ha!"

As I hear her cunning old laugh at my expense I sit hugging my love to my heart.

Old Betty always owed me a grudge for coming to Norlington Farm, although she had been compelled to show me ordinary civility.

How little she knew we were married only yesterday, under her very nose, as it were.

So far I had deceived him and the few other people I knew—deceived him through his own hardness; for so far as I was concerned I would have told him, only I knew and my husband knew that any sudden shock would in all probability kill him.

We should have parted and kept true faith with each other if my strength had not been weakened when that good offer to go to Canada had come so suddenly. Then he had prayed me to marry him before he started, so that if my uncle died I might at once come out to him as his wife.

And now William was gone. The ship had sailed and I was alone; but happier far than as if I had denied him his prayer.

Since the day after my marriage, when Mr. Baines had been with my uncle, he had been quieter, but strangely anxious not to let me out of his sight.

All through the week I had not been once out of the house. Of this he seemed to take full care by keeping me near him by every pretense he could think of.

The ship had sailed only one week when my uncle died suddenly, and then on the day of his lonely funeral came the reading of the old miser's will.

I came down with my wedding ring exposed for the first time.

It was noticed at once.

Miss Glennie and Mr. Baines looked aghast at me. The doctor who had attended my poor uncle looked horrified, as well he might, knowing that it meant disinheritance to me if I married.

Old Betty's eyes had a wicked glean in them as she said, "Perhaps you di[illegible] know, you and William Mapleson, t[illegible] you'd lose everything if you married?"

"We did not care to think of it." I [illegible]

"I should have sailed with him had my duty kept me with your master."

"At that moment I could not say [illegible] uncle," old Betty looked so malicious.

"And so," she said, "you have [illegible] and lost a fortune—lost a fortune to [illegible] married!"

I cannot describe the insolent sneer [illegible] which she hissed out the words.

"I made his will the 27th of this month, my dear lady, decreeing it so. W[illegible] were you married?"

"On the 26th, Mr. Baines."

The old gentleman stared at me, then rapidly read the short will.

I was to be disinherited of more than half a million of money if I married from that date—so it worded.

I was married the day before.

Dealers in Second Hand Finery.

The dealers in second hand finery are clever of device. The writer found the walls of what was once a parlor hung with dresses three deep, and piles of others on the tables and chairs. The dwarf of a man in charge of the place greeted his visitor warmly, and asked her whether she wanted an indoor or a walking suit. Womanlike, one of them replied that she wished to see whatever he had. At that he began to take down one dress after another, always accompanying the gown with some such remark as "Here is one which I will tell you in strict confidence I got from Mrs. Rhinelander," or "Here is a perfect beauty, made by Worth only three months ago for Mrs. Vanderbilt, only $60 to you." Every gown was coupled with the name of some millionaire lady, and credited to some notable of fashionable figures; nor did the man blush at his own fiction.

"You see, miss," he said, "the wealthy and fashionable ladies are obliged to have twenty times as many dresses as they can wear. They dare not appear more than a very few times in one suit, because they move in very small circles, and dresses become old in a month under such circumstances when they have been worn before all the lady's friends the second time. There is where practical philanthropy steps in. I believe the ladies of them at low prices, and sell them for a mere fraction of their cost, making a handsome profit besides. The ladies care little what I give for their gowns, as every cent is clear gain to them, and then they devote the money to charity. It is a new fad of benevolence."

"Is it possible," I exclaimed, "that these are second hand; that they have been worn?"

I meant to express some of the incredulity that I felt, but the man took what I said as a compliment to the gowns.

"I do not wonder you ask that," said he, "for many of these suits are not even wrinkled or mussed. To find one soiled anywhere is a rare thing, and as for their being worn, I never had one offered to me that showed the least sign of it. You see how it is: when a lady like Mrs. Astor finds her closets filled with dresses in which she has already appeared two or three times, she sends for me. She wants room to hang up her new dresses. She says: 'There are fourteen dresses,' or perhaps she has twice as many, 'how much will you give me for them?' I name a figure and she accepts it, or asks for a hundred more than I offer. She gets it, and I take the garments from her."—New York Sun.

"LOOK IN THY HEART."

Vainly, one summer's day, I sought to write
Some record of my woes, and leave some mark
Behind, so that another in the dark
Might
Of thy perilous eyes, and learn that deeper night
Is all that comes of watching them—when hark!
A voice (strangely) I know not whose or where
Of English song, and this his saw of night:
"Look in thy heart and write." Sweet Sidney,
Couldst thou foresee my plight? and by that word
Solve all my doubts? Yet still I have, the same
Misgivings as before—twas then as now—
Even in my heart I found no peace, and heard
No sound save foolish echoes of thy name.
—G. Melville Upton in Overland Monthly.

SEEING THE GUILLOTINE.

Hugo's Account of an English Lady's Visit to the Paris Executioner.

M. Sanson lived in the Rue du Marais du Temple, in an isolated house, of which the jalousies were always closed. He received many visits. Numbers of English people went to see him. When visitors presented themselves at M. Sanson's they were introduced into an elegant reception room on the ground floor, furnished entirely with mahogany, in the midst of which there was an excellent piano, always open and provided with pieces of music. Shortly afterward M. Sanson arrived and asked his visitors to be seated. The conversation turned upon one subject and another. Generally the English people asked to see the guillotine. M. Sanson complied with this request, no doubt for some consideration, and conducted the ladies and gentlemen to the adjoining street, (the Ru Albony, I think), to the house of the scaffold manufacturer. There was a shed at this place, where the the guillotine was permanently erected. The strangers grouped themselves around it and it was made to work. Trusses of hay were guillotined.

One day an English family, consisting of the father, the mother and three pretty daughters, fair and with rosy cheeks, presented themselves at Sanson's residence. It was in order to see the guillotine. Sanson took them to the carpenter's and set the instrument at work. The knife fell and rose again several times at the request of the young ladies. One of them, however, the youngest, was not satisfied with this. She made the executioner explain to her in the minutest details what is called the toilet of the condemned. Still she was not satisfied. At length she turned hesitatingly toward the executioner. "Monsieur Sanson," she said. "Mademoiselle," said the executioner. "What is done when the man is on the scaffold? How is he tied down?" The executioner explained the dreadful matter to her and said, "We call that 'putting him in the oven.'" "Well, Monsieur Sanson," said the young lady, "I want you to put me in the oven."

The executioner started. He made an exclamation of surprise. The young lady insisted. "I fancy," she said, "that I should like to be able to say I have been tied down on it." Sanson spoke to the father and mother. They replied, "As she has taken a fancy to have it done do it." The executioner had to give in. He made the young miss sit down, tied her legs with a piece of string and her arms behind her back with a rope, fastened her to the swinging plank and strapped her on with the leather strap. Here he wanted to stop. "No, no, that is not yet all," she said. Sanson then swung the plank down, placed the head of the young lady in the dreadful neck piece and closed it upon her neck. Then she declared she was satisfied. When he afterward told the story Sanson said, "I quite thought she was going to say at last, 'That is not all. Make the knife fall.'"—Things seen by Victor Hugo.

England Over Populated.

It requires no argument to show that England is very seriously over populated. The increase in the last fifty years is under estimated at 8,000,000, and the £159 value per head calculated by the late Dr. Farr (who died in 1883) is converted into a debit factor. Human over production is evident in every profession and trade, and while the duration of life has risen nineteen years, the population goes on increasing at an alarming rate of compound interest. Between 1861 and 1871 in round numbers our population increased 3,000,000; between 1871 and 1881, 3,400,000, and between 1881 and 1891 it will be found to stand at nearer 4,000,000. When the community is obliged to take up stock of any kind (but especially live stock) at the rate of 400,000 to 500,000 a year beyond its requirements, the stock becomes a curse and not a blessing.—Cor. London Times.

Relics in the Alps.

There have recently been discovered in the high Alps near the summit of the great St. Bernard five large granite altars and a number of other relics of the stone age, such as axes, knives, etc., used in the pagan epochs for sacrifices. Swiss writers emphasize the historical importance of this discovery in that it is a proof that St. Bernard was a place of sacrifice in pagan times, and also that as far back as the age of stone the Canton Valais was inhabited by human beings.—Public Opinion.

Quoting from "the Commandments."

"Pray, what do you mean by the Mizz?" said a little country girl to a new made friend of her own age from the city. "Why, before I came up here, I thought all that wasn't in New York was in the Miz." "Yes, yes! But just what is the Miz?" said the country girl. Her friend replied, with surprise and horror: "Haven't you learnt the commandments? Doesn't it say, 'The Lord made heaven and earth, and all that in them Miz?'"—Good Housekeeping.

Alaska's Wealthy Church.

The Greek church at Sitka, Alaska, is one of the wealthiest in the world, its treasure consisting for the greater part in old paintings of the saints set in frames of gold and silver. One picture, a present from the czar, is valued at $40,000. The massive doors of the church are heavily inlaid with the precious metals.—New York Evening World.

Thought It Was an Owl.

A near sighted young man in the city went out on a hunting expedition the other day. In the woods he saw what he thought was an owl perched on a tree. He fired several times at the object, but it never stirred. Just at this juncture he discovered that he had been deluded by a piece of mud on his eyeglass.—Watertown Times.

A Young Man's Experience.

"When you get very tired," said one young man to another, "do you ever lose command of words and ideas?" "No," said the other young man, "I can't say that I do; but I have felt that way sometimes when I got home very late at night."—Somerville Journal.

SOCIETY'S DEBT TO PAUPERS

A Physician Takes an Unexpected Attitude on the Question of Public Charities.

"The saddest [illegible] of this world," said a New York physician to a reporter. "Men whose hearts have been crowded aside by plethoric pocketbooks," he added, "doole him their pennies in the same spirit that characterizes their dealings with unforcome an indispensable element in the march of civilization and science.

"Before the Christian era and for many centuries after he was crowded out of life, like Lazarus in the parable, dying on the doorstep of Dives' palace, covered with sores and in all respects a veritable old time tramp. In this enlightened age, however, he has no one to lay himself to blame if such a misfortune overtakes him. Society needs him and is willing to build and maintain extensive public institutions, where he may eat, sleep, be clothed and die at an annual expense in this city, for example, of less than $100 per capita, including a pine coffin and a grave in Potter's field.

"But is not the pauper a great drain on the taxpayer?

"Hardly. The obligations of society to the pauper, and the pauper's obligations to society, when weighed in the scales of primitive justice almost balance each other. If anything different can be found, the pauper has the worst of it. Unlike his brother, the criminal, whom the public is obliged to maintain, he has not become a burden on society through laziness or evil inclinations. Disease, old age, accidents are his irremediable misfortunes. He is compelled to accept charity; yet in the public estimation this fact overweighs all former services he may have rendered his fellow men in the discharge of his duties as a citizen, and society holds him body and soul until his obligations are fulfilled.

"In what manner can he possibly cancel his obligations?"

"In many ways. When disease overtakes him he becomes the object of medical experiments. Professors and students gather around his bedside and seek for some new light which may guide them in their practice among the independent classes, and surgeons undertake in his case operations they would never dream of attempting if the life of a paying patient were at stake. Thousands upon thousands die each year, giving up their lives in the interests of science; and the wealthy taxpayer derives in the end this benefit, that when some deadly disease strikes him down, his cure in many cases is effected by a new method of treatment, perfected by experiments which cost the lives of perhaps a hundred paupers. Glance at the medical experts in different diseases. The results of their experiments read something in this way: Total number of cases, 100; died, 70; improved, 23; cured, 7. Then follow the deductions as to the best treatment of the malady under consideration. Such compilations may be found in any medical work, and pauper cases have been in almost every instance the basis of the calculations.

"Aside from this how many obligations does one pauper cancel in sacrificing his body upon the dissecting table? How many physicians of reputation are indebted to him for their knowledge of anatomy and the functions of the various organs in the human body? What an important part he plays in the education and training of professional nurses? Thus he repays doubly whatever obligations he may owe to his fellow men. As a final consideration how could the commissioners of C. and C. manage to spend $1,500,000 per annum of the taxpayers' money if it were not for the paupers?"—New York Mail Express.

Hideousness of Mourning Raiment.

When a death occurs in the family the dressmaker is instantly summoned and everything that human ingenuity can devise in the way of hideous and mournful raiment is instantly ordered and worn indefinitely. In Europe the custom is different and much more sensible. Six months is considered a sufficiently long period for anybody to wear deep mourning, and deep mourning abroad means simply anything black. A widow in the first days of her grief will wear a costume of glistening black silk covered with brilliant cut jet. And pray, why should she not? How much more elegant and suitable, not to say sensible, is a gown like this instead of the dense somberness of our own mourning costumes that are enough to afflict every one with chronic blue devils? In this country people are beginning to show more common sense than heretofore about the length of time mourning should be worn, but there is still much to be desired in the character of the dress itself. These inky phantoms that parade our streets are neither cheerful nor edifying spectacles.—Clara Lanza's New York Letter.

Lincoln's Idea of Hamlet.

It is related that Abraham Lincoln once said to Hackett, the actor: "Why do you actors always play Hamlet as an irresolute, vacillating, vague, middle aged sort of a man?" "Because he was," said Hackett, with an air of certainty. "But he was not," said Lincoln; "he was young, impetuous, full of action, prompt. He is always doing something. The play is full of it, and he ought to be played as a young man." Walt Whitman thus expressed his opinion: "Is not that the mystery, the wonder, the fun of it, as the slang word would have it, that Hamlet combines both those phases, the uncontrollable impulse, aggressive temperament, and at the same time, the meditative, philosophic, anxious, hesitating man? Is not this the interest of the character which has caused it to be overlaid with great accumulations, which have hidden the poet's real purpose—if he had one."—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Curious Nurse.

In India, where the elephant is treated by his mahout almost as one of the family, the grateful animal makes a return for the kindness shown it by voluntarily taking care of the baby. It will patiently permit itself to be mauled by its little charge and will show great solicitude when the child cries. Sometimes the elephant will become so attached to its baby friend as to insist upon its constant presence. Such a case is known where the elephant went so far as to refuse to eat except in the presence of its little friend. Its attachment was so genuine that the child's parents would not hesitate to leave the baby in the elephant's care, knowing that it could have no more faithful nurse. And the kindly monster never belied the trust reposed in it.—St. Nicholas.

French Drums and Trumpets.

There has been invented for the use of the trumpeters in the French army an instrument which at will can be turned so as to throw the sounds backward. A new pattern of drum, smaller and lighter than before, has also been prescribed for use in the army.—Boston Transcript.

A HUMANE AND EASY WAY OF CATCHING CHICKENS.

Lessons Learned About Keeping Eggs at the London Dairy Show—A Simple Arrangement for Tightening Wire Fence. A Grape of Promise.

Among the claimants for favor in the fruit line is the Jewell grape, a variety that originated ten years ago with Mr. John Burr, of Leavenworth, Kan., but only recently put on the market. It is a seedling of the Delaware, which it resembles in some respects. The cut here given, in which both bunch and berry are reduced in size one half, will give an idea of the form of the grapes and the manner in which they grow on the cluster.

THE JEWELL GRAPE.

These grapes are of a purplish color, with a juicy pulp of fine vinous flavor and seeds few and small. The skin of the grape is strong, though thin, and covered with an attractive bloom. It is claimed that the vines are not only healthy and productive but hardy and free from rot. It has been recommended by various state horticultural societies, among which are the Missouri, Illinois and Kansas societies. Good words have been spoken of it also by growers in Ohio. A very general impression prevails that the Jewell grape will succeed wherever the Concord thrives.

How to Keep Eggs.

At the recent London dairy show, as in previous seasons, the managers offered prizes for the best method of preserving eggs. Professor James Long, one of the judges, gives an account of the examination and conclusions made by the judges at the time of the exhibition. In this report are many opportune hints of value, some of which are here reproduced.

There were a very large number of entries, and after having seen every sample opened, there remained no question as to the perfection of preserving eggs in lime water and in salt, though several other articles were used for the purpose. A strange fact noted was that while many exhibitors employed both lime and salt, these articles were prepared in a different manner. In past years it was observed by the judges that eggs have repeatedly failed where they had been packed in salt, on account of their being imperfectly packed. As a result of the competitions, the opinion is expressed that when salt is used it is advisable to obtain a box in which the bottom is screwed on. A layer of an inch of salt is followed by a layer of eggs packed close together, but not touching each other. These are again covered with a layer of dry salt well pressed in and followed by another layer of eggs, and so on until the top is reached, care being taken that the salt is perfectly dry throughout, and that it is thoroughly well pressed in the box. When the box is filled the lid is fixed, and when it is necessary to commence to use the eggs the bottom of the box is unscrewed, and the stalest taken out first.

Where lime is adopted as a preservative, a different course must be observed from that which is common. It has been the custom to recommend a thick mixture of lime and water, or lime cream, but it is found in practice that the eggs become so firmly imbedded in the lime that it is frequently difficult, or even impossible, to take them out, and as there is no advantage in using a large quantity of lime, for the water can take up only a certain proportion, it is found preferable to simply drop the eggs into lime water, such as would be made from a mixture of a good handful of lime to a gallon of water. In preserving it is better to use a large vessel than a small one, and all should if possible be of earthenware, the mouth being perfectly secure, and made airtight when the vessel is filled

The numerous systems of preserving with mixtures containing salt lime besides tartaric acid and oil are all inferior to the methods referred to. One other system, however, appears to succeed. It is that of packing the eggs in sweet bran in boxes which are turned once every week. In some instances sawdust is used for packing eggs which have been dipped in some preserving composition, but although they are preserved, a flavor is conveyed to the white corresponding to that of the material in which they are packed.

Preserving Posts.

Experiments conducted at the Iowa Agricultural college, with a view to ascertaining the relative value of tar, crude petroleum and the two combined as preservatives when applied to fence posts, make it appear that tar is valuable for all woods. Petroleum alone seems to have little or no effect. Tar applied alone made a better showing than where the posts were tarred after being painted with petroleum. Posts painted first and then tarred did not absorb the tar. When unpainted posts were immersed in boiling tar it was observed that the tar had penetrated the wood one-eighth or one-quarter of an inch, thus forming a coat that could not [illegible]. Petroleum did no good when applied alone and harm when preceding the coat of tar. Tarring is estimated to cost two cents per post. The expense attending the use of tar appears to prove that the most economical application is greater than the profit when the application is to basswood and willow. What the profit will prove to be in the case of cedar and oak posts [illegible] has not yet claimed attention.

Cost of Making Pork.

While it is not true that the bulk of corn fed to hogs does give a return of ten pounds of pork, live weight, to the bushel, it is established that a bushel of corn will make that much and more, if properly handled; and where it does, the following will serve as a basis for calculations, being approximately correct: Feeding corn worth 12 1-2 cents per bushel makes pork costing [illegible] per pound; 17 cents per bushel, 2 cents per pound; 25 cents per bushel, 2 1-2 cents per pound; 33 to 40 cents per bushel, 4 cents per pound; 50 cents per bushel, 5 cents per pound. Or, pork at 5 cents per pound, gross, gives 50 cents per bushel for corn; at 4 cents per pound [illegible] per bushel. Pork on the hoof at 2 1-2 to 3 cents per pound, gross, pork gives from 25 to 30 cents per bushel for corn.

French Duty on Eatables.

One of the greatest impositions in Paris is the octroi or duty on eatables and drinkables collected at the various barriers or gates. As each market cart passes through the fortifications in the morning it is stopped and a small tax charged on each and every article brought into Paris. The same system is vigorously practiced for all articles going out of Paris. The suburbs are now composed of some dozen townships lying outside of the fortifications and numerous straggling villages which extend for miles around Paris. Each of these places has its barrier and custom house. An English friend of mine, recently settled here, had a dreadful experience with this system yesterday. He lives at Connelles, a suburb some three miles out of the city proper, and to reach which he is obliged to pass through six different townships. He purchased at an English butcher's on Rue Sainte Honore a leg of Southdown mutton as a treat for his wife. He was stopped at each of the six custom houses on his way home and was obliged to pay a sum equivalent to ten cents every time on the unfortunate leg of mutton.—Paris Cor. New York World.

White Leghorns for Eggs.

Mr. Carman, editor of The Rural New Yorker, says: For eggs we are convinced that for this climate white Leghorns will give us the greatest weight of eggs the year round, and, if kept warm and clean, will prove the best winter layers. The egg of a Dorking will average as large as that of a Leghorn, and they will lay as many in hot weather. But they cannot stand our winters as well. Leghorns and Dorkings will stand all the food they will eat and not get too fat. The Brahmas, if over fed, will get too fat and stop laying. We have known four pounds of fat to be taken off a single Brahma hen.

American Horticultural Society.

The eighth meeting of the American Horticultural society is announced to take place at Riverside, Cal., beginning Feb. 14, 1888. Full particulars, giving railroad and hotel rates, will be given on application to W. H. Ragan, secretary, Greencastle, Ind. This society, of which Parker Earle, the well known horticulturist, of Cobden, Ills., is president, is doing a good work, and it is hoped that this meeting will be largely attended.

Seed Corn.

Waldo F. Brown, a practical Ohio farmer, claims that seed corn smoked brown as bacon grows stronger than that unsmoked. He would have seed corn cured in a smoke house, on lath racks, and the room made uncomfortably hot to stay in. He thinks corn cured by fire heat will not rot nearly so soon, when planted during cold, wet weather, as corn less thoroughly heated.

Woven Wire Fence Tightener.

Wire contracts in cold and expands in hot weather. Consequently in warm weather the panels of woven wire fences are liable to sag.

WIRE FENCE TIGHTENER.

The simple device illustrated on this page is suggested by Prairie Farmer. This can be readily made by sawing a slot in the end of a straight iron bar, just wide enough to admit the wire used on the fence, and long enough to cover the two strands of wire close to the slot. All needed is to slip the opening over two wires where they fork and twist them a little. Two or three twists on each panel will straighten the fence up as good as new. Two forms of tighteners are shown.

One Way to Catch Chickens.

A plan used in cities by poultry dealers to catch stray chickens that escape from the coops is advised by Southern Cultivator as a decided improvement over the usual one of chasing the fowls all over the farm.

AN INGENIOUS CONTRIVANCE.

The improved plan calls for the ingenious contrivance shown in the cut, which is nothing more or less than a long stout wire, bent as indicated, and with a wooden handle on one end. With this little implement in the hand, one may slip up behind the chicken and before the bird knows what is going on one leg is caught securely in the crook at the end of the wire.

Agricultural News.

Another new cotton picking machine is attracting attention. This one is the invention of Mr. Groves and is reported to have given satisfaction in Lee county, of Galveston, Tex., where it has been put to hard tests.

It is thought the tobacco crop will be one of the smallest on record. The cigar tobacco of the east is generally reported as in good condition, while the prospect is more unfavorable in Wisconsin.

The wool report prepared by the bureau of statistics estimates the wool clip for the year at $70,000,000, and it says that the number of sheep has increased since the last census from 40,000,000 to 50,000,000.

The W. C. T. U. will hold their next meeting at the home of Rev. W. H. Benton's next week Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 27th. A cordial invitation is extended to all to come and enjoy a pleasant afternoon.

At the quarterly conference held Monday, Dec. 19th, the trustees of the M. E. church at Ridgeway were advised and required to change the outside front doors of said church so as to conform to the law.

Orange blossoms are reported on both sides of us, some in the village and some out a few miles. The doomed parties must be better fixed financially than some we know of, or they could not secure such a luxury since the new law took effect.

FRANKLIN FACTS.

Billy Fisher has bought the John H. Mills farm in Dist. No. 2.

Fred Poucher is attending school at Commercial College, Adrian, this winter.

Mrs. Sim Whelan is lying very sick, with, as we understand, catarrhal fever.

Mrs. George Allen is pronounced better by her physician. She is however, very weak and low, quite unable to help herself in any way.

Miss Brown of Dist. No. 2, will make glad the hearts of the little ones with a Christmas tree at the school house on Friday evening next. Some recitations and dialogues will be presented, together with music and a good time generally is expected.

Miss Wilbur of the Center school was unable to teach Friday, on account of sore eyes.

The Center school boasts of being the largest school in town. It has 52 scholars and more coming next week. See Literary Journal.

Milton Burns is just completing a grain elevator at the C. J. & M. station at Tipton.

Frank Billington and wife have been made happy by the advent of a little daughter.

Clark Fuller, of the vicinity of Britton, has been spending the week with Franklin relatives and friends.

Mrs. Joseph Herbison met with a very annoying and quite serious accident last Wednesday. While attending her chamber work and feeling very poorly, her foot slipped and she fell, striking her left side against the foot of the bed, knocking one tooth entirely out and bruising and blackening her whole side, face and head very badly. Although badly hurt she is able to sit up a part of the time.

Elijah Allen has moved from the Thorpe farm to Otis Whelan's Davenport place.

Gracie Spaulding, although pronounced out of danger by her physicians is recovering but slowly.

The Center school dist. and the Stone schoolhouse dist. are shaking fists at each other in a way that seems to mean business. The bone of contention is the public school money which G. W. Allen's children have drawn for the last six years amounting, as claimed by dist. No. 3 to about $60. Some ten years or more ago G. W. Allen took the necessary steps to be set off in the Center dist. ever since which time his children have attended school there. The men concerned in the transfer remember the circumstance well, but by some oversight it was never recorded in Adrian, and when Ed. Learnard's store was was burned at Tipton the records were lost. Dist. No. 3, (or rather the school board) ignore the transfer and claim G. W. as a citizen of their district.

On the night of the 16th of Dec. the Franklin Union literary and lyceum met at the house of L. E. Taylor. Two weeks previous Mr. Taylor had opened his hospitable doors for the society, but the early evening being stormy few ventured out. Those few however were well rewarded for their extra exertion by spending a very happy and profitable evening. On the 16th, the weather being fine, his house was well filled. The exercises were very enjoyable, the pieces being well rendered and the music fine. The Question box for once, the first time, was a trifle over done. After a brief intermission, the question, "Resolved that the Indian had been more sinned against than he has sinned," was taken up and discussed; leaders, L. E. Taylor, aff.; Bertha Taylor, neg. 'Ere the speakers had all been called out, Bertha, who had been very much indisposed all day, became seriously ill. The question was therefor submitted at once to the judges and decided unanimously in favor of the Neg. Society adjourned to meet at David Burrough's in two weeks from Friday night. The usual literary and musical program will be carried out. The Question for the evening will be, "Resolved that the mental powers of man are superior to those of women." Leaders S. N. Munger, aff.; J. S Allen, Neg.

The literary exercises at Mr. Taylor's included a little paper edited by Alma Whelan and Anna Allen, called The Literary Journal.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

J. C. Mace Sundayed in Adrian.

Frank Carpenter has taken up his abode with A. M. Sleeper and is going to school.

We notice Jno. Schwab nearly every day driving a fine three year old colt. He is a daisy and can "get to the front."

If you see a thing coming in the road wearing black glasses and a butterfly cap, don't get scared, for it is nothing but Will Gordon.

A photographer from Adrian, came to our village one day last week and "shot" one of Hoxsie's picket machines, and then the foundry and quite a number of men and boys.

A surprise was given Stan Doty last Saturday evening, and the details are as follows: At the appointed hour a large house full of young folks pounced down on him, not to devour him, but to have a high old time and eat a large quantity of oysters which they took with them. At about 12 P. M the crowd dispersed with these words: "Let's have more such."

J. W. Ash and Frank Frink shipped 16 crates of pickled eggs from this station by express to Boston, last Saturday.

Geo. Hoxie received a car of soft coal for the foundry. Also a planer and an engine from Dundee, to be repaired, the same date. W. Binns drove them to the shop for him.

Aggie Still spent Saturday and Sunday at Raisin Valley.

We notice in last week's issue an article under the head of "Lake Ridge Laconics" Well now, fellow-reporter, we want no controversy with you, as we of course believe you meant nothing wrong in your report of the game, but we think you were mistaken as to the arm giving out. We may be off the main track and in the gutter but we are happy to say we are not alone. We extend you our hand in kind feelings. Hoping this will settle all controversy between us, I remain, yours truly.

CORRESPONDENT.

Hello! here is our web-footed friend once more. We make no mistake in saying ho! ha! for it is enough to make any one laugh to read your foolishness. To say the least you make us real tired. You advise us to keep our feet warm and our head cool. Thanks for your kind advice. But we must give you a little advice, just to the contrary. Keep your feet cool, and then your neighbors will not be obliged to keep their hand over their nose whenever they get within 80 rods of you, and warm your head just to thaw out what little brain there is in it, and get it into working order, for we have not seen any very good effects of its use yet. Well, now you just mind your own business and we will look out for the Lake Ridge correspondent. We think he is a person of better intellect than yourself, and has a 16 oz. to the pound brain, which beats yours by about 15 oz. to the pound. You say we have exhausted the supply of mind, but we guess, as anyone knows you are so very small it would take but a very small lot to do you. That if you will make another search in the corners, you will find enough to busy you, which if you did, would be a blessing to the community. Well, we read on a ways farther in your "Proclamation" and find a little more advice. "Very good." We have done as you advised and find it works finely. Now, according to your tell, this makes twice we have been washed, which beats your record by just two. It is to be plainly seen that you failed to get even the first washing when you came to this planet.

It is a lucky thing for you that the Creator favored you with so large a mouth, for had he given you a "common size" you would have been unable to work off all the mind you have, thereby endangering your life, which is so very valuable, (to you, not to anyone else.) You had better go and tell your mother; she wants you for soap-grease, as you are certainly fit for nothing else.

MACON MUSIC.

Will Reed has returned from his visit with friends in Ohio, and will commence the winter term of school on Monday Dec. 19.

Archibald Chambers and family were suddenly called home on account of the death of Mrs. Chamber's sister, Mrs. Libbie Pinkum.

Mrs. Edith Triplet of Tecumseh, was visiting and calling on friends last week.

Fred Robinson and Hattie Smith were united in marriage at the home of the bride, on Thursday evening, Dec. 15.

The ladies of the reformed church held their aid society last week at the residence of Mr and Mrs. Albert Maples, donating to them the proceeds, the amount of which was $6.00; also a new dress and provisions sufficient to last them the greater part of the winter.

WIDE AWAKE FOR 1888.

We have a primer entitled "A Modern Wonder" which sets forth with singular fulness and brevity what is going to be in WIDE AWAKE for a year ahead.

The primer is not very long. The little pages are easy to read. But it holds such wealth of learning and entertainment, you wonder how so much can be got into a dozen months; and yet you read on the title page that the half is not told.

It is a wonder! Wide Awake is a veritable library, changing from month to month and from year to year, and always growing better apparently.

But what we can't understand is how they can put so much money into it and pay so much for getting subscribers.

The Holiday number contains the Premium List of 32 pages. They give a boy or girl who gets subscribers almost as much in his choice of two or three hundred things as the money he sends amounts to. And the things are such as people want; a good many of them new to most of us. Even the Premium List is good reading.

Where the profit comes from out of $2.40 a year is what we can't make out; but that is none of our business.

Send for the primer to D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

FOR EVERY MECHANIC.

We are in receipt of the "MECHANICAL NEWS" for November 15, and take pleasure in calling the attention of readers to the merits of that popular and long established journal. Its pages are full of instructive and timely matter relating to the various branches of mechanical and manufacturing industry and every number contains from ten to twenty choice illustrations, showing the progress of invention both in our own and in foreign countries.

"The Mechanical News" is a sixteen-page paper, published twice a month. The subscription price is only one dollar a year, and with its able staff of contributors it never fails to give in a single issue information of many times that value to the practical mechanic. The paper is now in its seventeenth volume, and has steadily improved in the quality of its contents, and, as a natural consequence, in its popularity with the reading public.

The publishers announce that they furnish sample copies free, and liberal inducements are offered to agents and canvassers for subscribers. A circular giving full particulars will be sent to any one applying for the same. Address THE MECHANICAL NEWS, 110 Liberty Street, New York.

The Republican National Convention will be held in Chicago this year and June 19th is the date.

Several cities are reaching out for the Democratic National Convention. New York seems to hold the lead at present.

The Union Labor Advocate a straight [illegible] reform.

The President believes in the doctrine that the [illegible] belongs to the people, and the Senate will sustain him in it.

Pronounced unconstitutional. That point has been settled, and it is a great point gained. Is it practice? That issue is yet to be fought out.

"It is a condition which confronts us—not a theory." The condition is an overflowing Treasury. All the theories in the world will not dispose of that one hard fact. Tax reduction will.

Hugh Mc. Culloch who was Secretary of the Treasury under both Lincoln and Arthur, endorses Cleveland's tariff reform message.

The decided endorsement of the president by the Chicago Tribune has rattled the monopoly press of the country. The Tribune represents a constituency large enough to control Illinois upon a tariff vote.

The driven well sharks succeeded in collecting about $8,000 royalty from the people of Licking County, Ohio, before the fraud was finally knocked out by the Supreme court. But the men who paid are now miserable, while those who pluckily resisted are correspondingly happy.

The Providence Journal, which is a Republican paper says: It is about as fair to accuse the man who desires a judicious revision of the tariff of being a free trader, as the man who buries the rubbish in his back yard of being an incendiary.

Here is a small straw but a very significant one. St. Louis, Dec. 8.—The Collier white lead company, of St. Louis, have telegraphed President Cleveland, approving his message, and asking that the tariff on white lead and grey lead be reduced 50 per cent.

Here is another straw which shows how the wind is setting on the question of tariff reform. PITTSBURG, Dec. 9. The Samuel J. Randall club, the principal Democratic organization in Allegheny county, met last night and unanimously passed resolutions indorsing President Cleveland's message.

The Bohemian oats swindle has as many lives as a cat. It has been pretty thoroughly exposed in Michigan and may be considered a dead swindle here as well as in Ohio and some other States. It is a very live swindle just now in Missouri, where the farmers are either blessed with short memories or do not read the newspapers. It will probably turn up on the Pacific coast one of these days.

The failure of the Congress heretofore to provide against the dangers which it was quite evident the very nature of the difficulty must necessarily produce, caused a condition of financial distress and apprehension since your last adjournment, which taxed to the utmost all the authority and expedients within Executive control, and these appear now to be exhausted.

If disaster results from the continued inaction of Congress the responsibility must rest where it belongs.—Cleveland's Message.

"When we consider that the theory of our institutions guarantees to every citizen the full enjoyment of all the fruits of his industry and enterprise, with only such deduction as may be his share toward the careful and economical maintenance of the government which protects him, it is plain that the exaction of more than this is indefensible extortion, and a culpable betrayal of American fairness and justice.—President Cleveland's Message.

THE WEEK IN CONGRESS.

WORK OF OUR NATIONAL SOLONS AT WASHINGTON.

The Faulkner-Lucas, of West Virginia, Contest Settled and Faulkner Seated.—Various Election Bills and Resolutions Introduced in the Senate and House.

WASHINGTON CITY, Dec. 13.—The first business in the senate Monday was the adoption of a resolution naming the standing committees, and another making the select committees. Edmunds introduced a bill to regulate suffrage in the territories, the object being to keep out of the country polygamists, foreigners, such as convicts, paupers, etc. A petition for prohibition of the sale of munitions of war to aborigines, also for forming six new states in the Union, namely, one out of Dakota, for Abraham Lincoln, for the same out of Washington, for the same out of Montana, for the same out of New Mexico, and for the free coinage of silver, altogether 500 bills were introduced. After an executive session the senate adjourned.

A number of executive communications referring to "private" land claims were read in the house, and a petition presented from O. G. Chase, claiming to be a delegate to congress in the "public land strip," or the territory of Cimmaron. Mr. Chase asks to be admitted to congress as a delegate. Speaker Carlisle then left the chair and asked the house to relieve him of the duty of appointing the elections committee, as he is a party to the contests. The house then agreed to the resolution for Carlisle to name the committee.

WASHINGTON CITY, Dec. 14.—In the senate today the bill passed to the house imposing a tax of 5c. was reported favorably from the finance committee. Bills were introduced, to repeal the limitation on payment of arrears of pensions, and granting arrears of pensions to widows of pensioners, special act to provide for adjustment to sources of revenue for a constitutional amendment extending the congressional term to the last Tuesday in April, amending the inter-state commerce act, to establish a postal telegraph, and to grant pensions to steamboatmen acting under the orders of United States officers during the war. A resolution was offered that treaties be considered in open session. Dolph spoke in favor of sea coast defences. A large number of bills were introduced besides those noted above. The senate then adjourned.

The house held a short session, receiving a number of executive communications, which were properly referred, and then took recess till 1 p. m., at which time Carlisle took the floor, and moved the appointment of the following committee on privileges and elections: Crisp, chairman, O'Farrell, Outhwaite (Ind.), Moore, Rowell, Houk, Cooper, Lyman, Johnson (Ind.), and Lodge. This is the committee agreed upon Monday, and the resolution was adopted. Carlisle then resumed the chair, and the papers in the contested election cases were referred to the committee, and the house adjourned until Friday.

WASHINGTON CITY, Dec. 16.—The unanimous report on the West Virginia contested election case was made from the elections committee to the senate Wednesday, and was adopted viva voce. Faulkner was then sworn in. The report said that the questions raised were of the simplest and had been settled long ago. A bill providing that when a patented article is bought in good faith and only for use—not for sale—an action against the purchaser shall not hold, and also providing that patents shall be subject to purchase by the government at a reasonable valuation, was referred to the committee on patents. Morrill's immigration regulation bill was then taken up, and Morrill advocated its passage in a speech at length, after which the senate went into executive session and in a short time adjourned.

WASHINGTON CITY, Dec. 17.—A proposition was received in the senate Thursday from the Italian residents of this city to present a bust of Garibaldi to the United States. It was referred to the library committee. Among the bills introduced were the following: To prohibit United States judges and courts from authorizing the borrowing of money by receivers of railroad and other corporations beyond the amount of their actual net earnings to be set aside; the land is granted to Michigan for a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon; to facilitate the settlement of Alaska by encouraging railway construction, etc. A resolution to pay the heirs of Benj. Perley Poore six months' salary was adopted. Stewart made an extended speech in favor of his bill for the issue of coin certificates, and then, after an executive session, the senate adjourned until Monday.

WASHINGTON CITY, Dec. 17.—The house on Friday settled the question of holiday recess by adopting a proposition to adjourn from Dec. 22 to Jan. 4. There was a short and humorous debate over the matter, Reed of Maine twitting the Democrats with the fact that there was much business to be attended to, and intimating that the trouble was that members were rather bothered by the message of their "advanced" brother at the other end of the avenue. To which Cox replied that he was glad to see Reed anxious to get to business; he had never seen him that way before. Some uninteresting routine business was then transacted and the house adjourned until Monday.

Mormons in the Northwest.

OTTAWA, Ont., Dec. 17.—There is an uncertain feeling in political circles over the settlement of Mormons in the Canadian northwest territories. Fifty Mormon families have already taken up land near Fort McLeod. The impression prevails here that the new arrivals will not be molested. The introduction of such an element into Canada will, however, be made the subject of inquiries in parliament next month.

FIRES AND OTHER ACCIDENTS.

A body supposed to be that of William Reed, was found on the beach Monday morning at Atlantic City, N. J. Reed, who was well known in connection with "Barnum's Museum" was missed on the 3d while searching for buried treasure supposed to contain treasure.

In a coal mine near Hawesville, Ky., Sunday, were found the bodies and the remains of an unknown colored man. The party had been almost reduced to skeletons and it is supposed they had perished days ago in the damp air from foul gases and lay undiscovered.

Susie [illegible] was burned to death Wednesday morning at Cincinnati. Her dress caught fire from a stove and she ran out to her father's residence, and dang greatly burned her father.

Henry [illegible]'s dwelling, five miles South of Fort [illegible], W. Va., was burned Saturday night. Four children perished in the flames.

Scott's iron and steel works at Newport, Ky., were wrecked Tuesday morning by an explosion of the boilers, throwing 500 men out of employment.

An Offensive Breath

is most distressing, not only to the person afflicted if he has any pride, but to those with whom he come in contact. It is a delicate matter to speak of, even to friends but lovers. Bad breath and catarrh are inseparable. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases as thousands can testify.

The steamboat, the reaper, the sewing machine,
Cars running by night and by day,
Houses lighted by gas and heated by steam,
And bright electricity's ray.

The telegraph's click spoils the light-ning's release,
Then the telephone comes to excel it,
And, to put on the finish, the last but not least,
Is the famous little Purgative Pellet.

Last but not least is Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellet, because it relieves human suffering; adds to the general human comfort, and enables the sleepless sufferer to enjoy all the blessings and luxuries of the age we live in.

Not Exactly English, You Know.

An Englishman traveling on the continent had hired a smart servant, and on arriving at an inn in Austria one evening, knowing well the stringency of the police regulations, he called for the usual register of travelers that he might duly inscribe himself therein. His servant replied that he had anticipated his wishes, and had registered him in full form as "an Englishman of independent property."

"But how have you put down my name? I have not told it to you."

"I can't exactly pronounce it, but I copied it from gentleman's portmanteau."

"But it is not there. Bring me the book."

What was his amazement at finding, instead of a very plain English name of two syllables, the following portentous entry: "Lordself—Mole-sear—Warranted-soil-leather." Tit-Bits.

Negotiating for a Dog.

Robinson—That's a fine dog you have, Dunley. Do you want to sell him?

Dunley—I'd sell him for $50.

Robinson—Is he intelligent?

Dunley (with emphasis)—Intelligent? Why that dog knows as much as I do.

Robinson—You don't say so! Well, I'll give you twenty-five cents for him, Dunley. New York Sun.

Conductor—Waiting for the up train.

"Is a fearfully long stop."

"Yes; that trains generally an hour late." Omaha World.

Striving to Please.

Old Lady (sharply to boy in drug store)—I've been waiting for some time to be waited on, boy.

Boy (meekly)—Yes, ma; wot kin I do for you?

Old Lady—I want a two cent stamp.

Boy (anxious to please)—Yes, ma. Will you have it licked? New York Sun.

Woman (to country postmistress)—Is there ennythin' for me today? I'm sot on hearin' from my darter, Mirandy.

Postmistress—There's a postal. Mirandy writes she's enjoin' herself an' won't be home till nex' week.—Texas Siftings.

Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jesse Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung Troubles. Was given up by doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample bottles free.

Letter to the Assistant Foreman of the Delivery Department—Subject in which Thousands are deeply Concerned.
About five years ago I suffered from painful urination and great pain and weakness in the lower part of my back, pain in the limbs, bad taste in the mouth, disgust at food, and great mental and bodily depression.
I live at 201 York st., Jersey City, and on auditing hour one night I found a copy of the Shaker Almanac that had been left during the day. I read the article, "What is the Disease that is coming upon me?" It described my symptoms and feelings better than I could if I had written a whole book. My trouble was indeed "like a thief in the night," for it had been stealing upon me unawares for years. I sent for a bottle of Shaker Extract of Roots or Siegel's Syrup and before I had taken one half of it I felt the welcome relief. In a few weeks I was like my old self. I enjoyed and digested my food. My kidneys soon recovered tone and strength and the urinary troubles vanished. I was well.
Millions of people need some medicine simply to act on the bowels. To them I commend Shaker Extract in the strongest possible terms. It is the gentlest, pleasantest, safest and surest purgative in this world. The most delicate women and children may take it. One pellet more. I have all the more confidence in this medicine because it is prepared by the Shakers. I may claim to be a religious man myself and I admire the Shakers for their zeal, consistency and strict business integrity. What they make may be trusted by the public. W. H. HALL.

FOR HONOR'S SAKE.

"Then it would be necessary," I said, "to take her dying deposition. Doctor, it is my firm conviction that the man and the woman who entered Edward Layton's house after midnight on the 24th of March were not Edward Layton and Mabel Rutland."

"But the coachman drove them home," exclaimed Dr. Daincourt.

"So he said."

"And took them from Prevost's Restaurant."

"So he said. Recall that part of the coachman's evidence bearing upon it. He says that Edward Layton accompanied by a lady joined [illegible] at 11.55, that Layton appeared excited, which [illegible] to Dr. Daincourt, he declared his having taken too much wine. To rebut this we have the evidence of the waiter, who declared that Layton simply tasted the wine that was ordered. He could not have drunk half a glass. The man and the woman came from the restaurant, jumped quickly into the carriage, and but one word, 'home,' was uttered in a thick voice. Now, Layton, in his ridiculously weak cross examination, put two questions to the witness. 'Did it occur to you,' he asked, 'or does it occur to you now, that the voice which uttered that word was not my voice?' The witness replied that it had not occured to him. Then Layton said, 'You are certain that it was my voice?' And the witness replied, 'Yes, sir.' To me, these two questions put by Layton are convincing proof that it was not he who entered the carriage from Prevost's restaurant."

"But he wore his ulster," said Dr. Daincourt.

"Here, again," I said, "we have evidence which, to my mind, is favorable. The waiter testifies that when Layton entered the room in which the supper was ordered he took off his ulster and hung it on a peg in the wall, a some distance from the table at which he sat. Moreover, he sat with his back to the coat. Layton, in his cross examination, asked the waiter, 'Did I put the overcoat on before I left the room?' The waiter replied, 'Yes.' The judge interrupted with the rebuke, 'You have said in examination that you did not see the prisoner and his companion leave the room.' And the witness replied, 'But when I returned, after being away for three or four minutes, monsieur was gone and the coat was also gone.' The prisoner put his last question to the waiter, 'You did not see me put on the overcoat?' And the witness answered, 'No.' Doctor, I see light. Bring me news of the ring set with turquoises and diamonds. I shall be at home the whole of the evening."

After Dr. Daincourt's departure I made a hurried breakfast, went through my correspondence and resumed my task of examining Eustace Rutland's letters to his sister. The second opened communication was exactly of the same shape and form as the first which I had deciphered. I give here an exact copy of it:

TECUMSEH, MICH., DEC. 8 1887

[illegible]

The Farmers' Union met at Mrs. McLain's, Friday evening, Dec. 1st. There was a large number present and the program was well carried out. The question, "Is it profitable to raise poultry?" opened by Mrs. Davidson, was discussed as follows:

Mrs. M. Davidson—Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen: I have very little to say on the subject of poultry raising. But we think it pays if situated near a market. On the farm how can we get along without them. They will pick most of their living, and by so doing lessen the cost. I think they should be kept for the table. Many are keeping their families by this means. There is no reason why it does not pay. Fannie Fields says it pays. She has kept a large number of fowls, chickens, turkeys and ducks, and by keeping an account of the expenses, she found at the end of the year that she had a nice profit. We cannot compete with Fannie Fields, because we do not enter into the business so extensively. But little capital is needed. I [illegible] with a small flock; I think fowls should have a warm house for winter, and warm feed in the morning. Some feed shells and meat. I prefer the Plymouth Rocks and Langshans. The bronze Turkeys are my favorite because they are more hardy. A little ready money at Christmas time is very acceptable. I think farmers have great need of improvement in the poultry business.

Mrs. VanNess—We have had very little experience in poultry raising. Have not raised extensively. Have never raised ducks and geese at all. I thought the time and feed required, there was very little profit. We have raised only enough for our own family use.

Mrs. Williams—Do not think my little experience will allow me to say very much on the subject. I have not kept an account of the cost of raising poultry. When we bought the farm, we bought the poultry that was on it. That cost us $18. In the fall I found that what eggs and chickens we sold brought us $50, besides what we used, and then wintered 75 fowls. The next year I kept turkeys and ducks. I made two or three nice pair of pillows from the ducks and then sold them in the fall. Markets are too low here to make poultry raising very profitable. I received a letter from my sister in the east, saying that she received 18 cents per pound for her ducks. I received 7 cents. Perhaps some one else can explain the difficulty of low markets here. I cannot.

Bert. Blood—I think late chickens are not as profitable as early ones. I raised or hatched 250 spring chickens. Have now about 100 left. Raised and sold 50 turkeys, for which I received $34. I think turkeys are more profitable than chickens. If left to run at large they will pick the most of their living.

Mrs. M. Smeltzer—We do not raise chickens extensively. Have never raised turkeys. I think this year that chickens pay better. They are a better price now, and those who sold early missed it.

M. Davidson—I do not get much of the profits of poultry raising. When they are taken to market the ladies always go and stay very close to the wagon until they are disposed of.

Mrs. Williams—If it is not profitable will some one explain why not?

Mrs. McLain—I think poultry raising pays better than butter making. I have sold poultry and eggs enough to satisfy me that it is profitable.

Mr. Cadmus—I think it would pay if an account were kept. We do not raise much poultry.

Mr. Sanford—I can say that it pays. By having poultry around there is a good deal of stuff saved that would otherwise be wasted. Last year sold about $40 worth of chickens. Kept till January and received 8 cents for them. I think it pays to keep chickens for the family use. I have had no experience in raising turkeys lately.

H. Eaton—I do not believe there is a profit by furnishing feed. Turkeys and chickens are profitable enough if kept on a large scale, no doubt. I think there is more profit in the smaller fowls for eggs. My experience has been with chickens.

Mrs. Blood—Is it better to do without a garden or without chickens? My experience has taught that we cannot have both.

M. Smeltzer—I think there is much profit for the ladies. My wife fed her chickens on kickor, nut shucks and oyster shells which caused them to eat up my potatoes or keep me covering them most of my time.

Mr. Williams—We do not get much profit from poultry raising. Ladies pocket the money. But they do not say what is done with it.

Mrs. McLain—I think it generally goes to provide for the family, groceries, etc.

Mrs. VanNess—Many wives and daughters are clothed by this means.

Mrs. Williams—She had sometimes paid taxes with her poultry money.

By request Miss Hattie Russel favored the company with a recitation entitled auction-extraordinary. And Miss Louise Brown by some singing. The meeting then adjourned to meet [illegible] Dec. 30, when the following program will be presented.

TECUMSEH & FRANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB.

On the evening of Dec. 4th the Tecumseh and Franklin Farmers' Club met at the residence of Mr. Thomas Langtons. The meeting was a large one, and every one was well repaid for attending.

After the literary program the question: "From past experience how can we manage our farms so as to receive the least damage from drouth?" led by W. J. Osborn, who in his paper said: In the spring I use the roller on my meadows and pasture lands. This presses the grass roots into the ground and makes the fields level. I find plaster to be a great benefit. In my [illegible] sowed deep. I cultivate my corn as soon and as often as I can, till harvest. I think an acre or two of sound corn would supplement our pastures and fodder greatly. We cannot tit wheat ground too much. While examining my wheat a short time ago, I noticed that the wheat I rolled, while rolling down furrows, was better than the rest.

Others followed and discussed the various crops thus:

Seeding:—Several succeeded in getting a good catch of clover on land that had been cropped continually for six seasons or more, while on their best land it was an entire failure.

An instance was cited where there was a good catch of clover and timothy on hard clay land, where a liberal amount of salt and plaster had been sown. This accounted for the good results since adjoining fields failed.

Corn—The sowing of salt either before or after plowing was strongly advocated. The crop should be frequently cultivated till harvest, after which it should be omitted, as it was liable to injure the surface roots and thus injure the crop. Shallow and level culture were considered best.

Oats—Two methods of preparing the soil were advanced: First: simply cultivate the ground thoroughly and sow the oats broadcast. Second; plow the ground and sow either with the drill or broadcast.

Both methods had produced splendid crops in past years and in some fields this season.

The methods were tested this year in the same field with this result.

The oats cultivated in were about four inches shorter than those on the plowed ground and the heads were smaller. Hence one farmer at least will henceforth plow his oat ground. All are in favor of rolling oat ground after sowing in order that the ground might hold moisture.

Potatoes—Only few had succeeded in raising partial crops this year. A fair per. centage of the early potatoes planted produced average crops yet in some cases their quality was injured by the hot weather. One farmer raised four hundred bushels on four acres of land. His mode of culture was this: he plowed the ground early in June. The field had been pastured. The potatoes were planted in furrows made with a garden plow and covered by leveling in the furrows. He cultivated frequently and practiced level culture. The time for planting he says is in the old of the moon in June; though he does not believe the moon benefits the crop; yet the season for planting, as designated by this hackneyed phrase, he has always observed and been rewarded with good crops.

Wheat—There was quite a diversity of opinion concerning the fitting of wheat ground. Some were in favor of working it as much as possible, others said work the ground less and apply fertilizers; some considered it a good policy to leave wheat ground rough so that the drill ridges would catch the snow in winter, and in the spring when wheat heaves, the ridges tend to level themselves and thus cover the roots of the wheat.

On the other hand instances were cited where wheat rolled after sowing gave good crops. This closed the discussion.

The next meeting will be held at Mr Frank Bryan's Dec. 28, 1887, at which time the following program will be presented.

Music.
Declamation—Clarence Conklin.
Essay—Albert Howard.
Vocal Duet—Misses, Bessie and Carrie Preston.
Clip Basket—Mrs. Swartz.
Music.—Trio.
Select Reading—Mrs. H. Hoag.
Vocal Solo—Hettie Waldron.
Question—Which is more profitable for the general farmer to use, the Shropshire or Merino sires, led by B. Hurry followed by H. Wilson and W. H. Osborn.

Mr. Langton's farm will be called Lonesome Alley.

A FINE BUILDING.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated News paper, of November 19th, contains a very fine depot recently erected in New York City by the Lake Shore's Eastern connection, the New York Central & Hudson River R. R.

Located in the Northern part of the city, at 138th Street, it will serve as a vast and rapidly increasing number of people now doing business in that section, and as all Express trains in and out, except the famous "Limited" are scheduled to stop there, it will prove to be a great boon for people outside of New York whose business or pleasure takes them to the upper portion of the Metropolis.

It is the only rival of the Grand Central Depot at 42d Street, and like that depot, will completely serve the community by which it is surrounded.

The Madison Ave. cars run into the depot grounds; the Third Ave. Cars are easy of access, and with carriages, which will be in waiting on the arrival of all trains, there will be no difficulty in reaching any point in its vicinity.

We will not attempt a minute description of this elegant building, but simply state that its appointments are complete in every respect, and advise you to call on the Lake Shore ticket agent at this place for details.

THE ART AMATEUR.

For December contains a charming colored plate of "Pansies," fine studies of "Holly and Mistletoe" and "China Asters," and a page of timely and useful suggestions for Christmas decoration. The other designs include a beautiful extra size classic figure (Hero)—the third of a series of six panels for painting or outline embroidery; an admirable arrangement of "Orange Lilies" for a vase of embroidery, a very pretty fishplate decoration—one of a set of six; a large and bold design of blackberry (vines and fruit) for wood engraving; three musical cupids for tapestry painting, a fine pomegranate altar-frontal and superfrontal design with full directions for treatment, and some pleasing diaper motives for curtain embroidery. Specially notable features are an excellent drawing of Knaus's "Holy Family" in the Catherine Wolfe collection, four delightful studies of children by Lobrichon, and two pages of very attractive studies of furniture and interior decoration for the ordinary home. There are valuable practical articles on still-life painting (dead game) and flower painting, oils, tapestry painting and artistic picture framing. The collector receives particular attention in a new department called "The Cabinet," which includes a fully illustrated article on Japanese "Snuff Bottles," a curious account of "Collecting in China," and numerous interesting notes. The Metropolitan Museum Exhibition, art in Boston, Mrs. Wheeler's show of embroideries, and other current topics receive due notice, and "My Note Book" bristles as usual with fresh and piquant paragraphs. A special illustrated series of articles on the furnishing and decoration of the average country house is announced to begin with the January number. Price 35 cents. Montague Marks, publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

The Latest Tornado

The surprising manner in which the country is being swept by the great discovery of Dr. Miles for curing the many diseases that orginate in the nerves is astonishing all who know the facts. The Restorative Nervine a brain and nerve food, sold by Baker & Hall cures weakness, want of appetite, exhaustion, debility from overwork, care, worry and dissipation. It takes the place of stimulates, opiates, chloral, etc., and cures all nervous troubles. It contains no morphine, opium or dangerous drugs.

The January number, 1888, of "Peterson's Magazine" is at hand this early in the month. This opening for the new year is a decided success. It has two handsome steel-engravings. One, "Among the Roses," is a beautiful plate, illustrating an interesting story by Frank Lee Benedict. The other is called "The Young Cricketer," and will go right to the heart of every boy who loves a game of ball. There is also an elegant design printed in colors, for a stripe for chair, etc., etc., in Berlin Wool. Besides numerous illustrations of dress and worktable patterns. Miss M. G. McClelland, who has lately taken a front rank among young Southern writers, begins a serial in her most intense dramatic vein; and there are, besides, a goodly number of short tales by writers of first class reputation, and poems far above the average of magazine literature.

The people as a mass seldom make mistakes. This accounts for a large demand for Dr. Bigelow's Positive Cough Cure. It has given such perfect satisfaction that some druggists offer an imitation on which they make a large profit. Beware of the imitation and the druggist who will cheat you. The genuine is sold by Dr. Geo. Ferguson and will promptly and safely cure coughs, colds, and all throat and lung diseases. Price 50c.

THE WOMAN'S WORLD.

The first number of the American issue of The Woman's World lies before us. It is a handsome volume of the size of The Magazine of Art, profusely illustrated with full page pictures and smaller [illegible] throughout the text. The topics are, of course, such as women are interested in, and while fashion plays an important part it is not to the exclusion of matter of general interest to women. The opening article is entitled "The Woodland Gods," and in it the forest heroines of the poets are described at length with pen and pencil. This is followed by a paper on "The Position of Women." "Madame de Sevigne's Grandmother," is the subject of the next paper, and Annie Thackary, the daughter of the novelist, is the author. Violet Fane follows with one of her pretty verses and then we are introduced to the first chapters of a new serial, "The Truth about Clement Ker," which certainly opens with a great deal of spirit. "Above the Cloud Line," is a graphic description of the beauties of the Engadine by Marie S. Bancroft. The first of a series of papers on "The Children of a great City," is given, then there is a short story and a paper on "The Oxford Ladies' Colleges," by a member of one of them, which is a bright account of an interesting subject. Then come a batch of "Literary and other Notes," by Mr. Oscar Wilde the editor, and last but not least are given [illegible] month. Cassell & Company, Limited, 739 and 741 Broadway, New York, 35 cents a number, $3.50 a year in advance.

C. D. Reyes, of Clinton, attended the Dickens entertainment last Thursday evening.

W. P. Wemple, of Ousted, was in town yesterday on business and paid his respects at the Herald office.

As next Sabbath is review day, being the last Sunday in the quarter, we have no Sunday school lesson this week.

Among the Clinton visitors who attended our Dickens entertainment, we noticed Mrs. Chas. Clark and Laura Clark.

The Christmas Dance next Monday night will eclipse them all. The Concert and Grand March will draw a large crowd of spectators.

The Gratiot County Journal issued a beautiful holiday edition of 16 pages last week. It is the neatest holiday sheet we have seen this year.

The Ladies Library will be open this week, on Friday Dec. 23d, instead of Saturday—from 3:30 to 4:30 P. M.
KATE ANDERSON, Librarian.

With the number for January, Scribner's Magazine begins auspiciously its second year. The features of the new year promise to be most interesting and valuable contributions to literature, and the publishers' announcement of increased excellence in illustration is evidently to be richly fulfilled.

H. M. Temple has resigned his position as Secretary of the O. & M. Coal & Mf'g Co., and severed his connection with the company. He started for the West Tuesday, to seek new fields and pastures. Bert has the true "business push" in him and we predict his success wherever he may decide to cast his lot. He goes first to Minneapolis.

The Tecumseh W. C. T. U. will observe crusade day, Friday, Dec. 23rd. The executive committee have prepared a short program, but will not carry out the full printed program. The meeting will be held in the room we usually occupy, in the basement of the M. E. church, and will commence at 2 o'clock instead of three. Our friends are invited to attend.

Osgood Bros. of Britton, would call the attention of farmers and mill men to the fact that they have the agency for the celebrated Bowsher Feed Mill made at South Bend, Ind. This mill is the lightest running and has the greatest capacity of any mill in existence. Correspondence solicited, or call personally and see the one in operation in the village of Britton.

Those who cannot travel to see for themselves may obtain an excellent idea of a thriving corner of the New South by reading a description of the city of Savannah, Georgia, published in Harper's Magazine for January. The improvements in the place since the war, as well as the traces of former days, are sketched not only in words, but by pencil in the illustrations of the monuments, public buildings, and natural scenery thereabouts. What a thriving town Savannah is will be news to most Northern people. I. W. Avery is the writer.

We clip the following from the Times, of Lorain, Ohio, which shows that our old friend, Dell Wood, is prospering in his new location.

W. A. Wood, the proprietor of the new restaurant opposite the Porter House comes out this week with an announcement which will be seen in our business locals. Mr. Wood has the reputation of keeping a very inviting restaurant and the courteous manner he and his estimable wife entertain their guests is gaining them many friends. The Times force has received a very cordial invitation to call and sample his oyster stews, for which invitation we assure him he has our thanks.

The show windows of our leading business houses present a very attractive appearance this week.

G. P. Sparks wishes to sell his Tecumseh property. He thinks of locating at Baxter Springs, Kansas.

The famers' clubs should name the farm where they hold their meetings. One club has instituted the practice. Let them all follow suit.

Chas. N. Felton, a member of Congress from San Francisco, was a resident of Tecumseh for a few months in the days long before the war.

Major VanAntwerp, one of the prominent citizens of Jackson, died on Tuesday last. He was a leading citizen of Jackson and the postmaster of that city. The funeral is held today.

We have received many compliments upon our Holiday supplement this year. The merchants of Tecumseh are live men. It was their patronage that enabled us to issue so fine a sheet.

The funeral of the youngest child of E. Pritchard and wife, was held at the house on Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. Getchell chose for a text words recorded in Matthew, 18: 10. "Their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven."

Among the latest exhibitions of what it is possible to accomplish by the engraver's art is a large pocket map just issued by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway, showing the north western country between Chicago and the Pacific Ocean in detail. A copy will be mailed free to any address upon application to C. H. Warren, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

The opening chapters of a splendid story for the young, by the famous showman, P. T. Barnum, appears this week in the columns of The New York Story-Paper. The story describes the adventures of an American boy, whom Mr. Barnum calls "My plucky Boy Tom," and whom he sent to India in search of wild, fierce, and rare animals to replace those destroyed by the disastrous fire at Bridgeport last month. The reader is thrilled by the hair-breath escapes of this dauntless American boy when capturing the fiercest and wildest animals ever seen in any traveling show. The New York Family Story Paper is for sale at all news stands.

The committee in charge have pledged themselves to make this the crown social affair of the season and they will doubtless succeed, for they have managed such parties before.

Life Insurance at Actual Cost.

Persons desirous of obtaining life insurance at actual cost, should write for circulars to the SECURITY MUTUAL BENEFIT SOCIETY, No. 233 Broadway, New York.

This Society claims that since its organization the cost to a member of middle age has been less than twelve dollars a year for each thousand dollars of insurance.

LABOR AND TEMPERANCE.

A Good Talk on these Topics by Walter Thomas Mills.

Last Friday, the eloquent temperance advocate, Walter Thomas Mills, happened to stop off in Tecumseh on business, and a committee of K. of L. prevailed upon him to stay over night and give our citizens a speech. About three o'clock in the afternoon hand bills were circulated, and a good audience greeted him in the evening. Considering the brief notice given, the attendance was fair, though not anticipated.

Mr. Mills has lost none of his vim and eloquence since he was here last spring, and he is equally at home on both the labor and temperance questions. In his remarks he combines the two to a certain extent, which we think does no harm to either. The following brief synopsis will show the general character of his Friday's speech.

He commenced his address with the statement that labor fought a long and desperate battle to establish the principle that it is not disreputable to be industrious. It has one more fight on hand and that is to establish the principle that it is disreputable not to be industrious. Man's natural life is three fold, intellectual, social and physical. The Hebrews in the lifetime of Jesus held that an ideal life should devote one-third of its working hours to each of these. Hence as is evidenced by the records of the trades to which the sages among them were devoted, while all were given to industry all had leisure for the development of intellectual and social faculties.

The Knights of Labor is an organization striving for a standard of manhood based on industrial and moral worth and hence they struggle for such improved industrial conditions as will render possible the leisure and personal comfort essential to this end. They ask for shorter hours. Man was not made for labor alone. They ask for national control of telegraphs because sources of public information ought not to be under private control. They ask for the ultimate adoption of co-operation among producers because the wages system has failed to secure to the producer the full value of his toil. Mr. Mills eulogized Powderly and closed by arguing that a vicious combination of monopolists, spoilsmen and bummers were in control of our public authorities, and that no remedy for wrongs in industry or politics was complete which did not involve the destruction of the saloon.

At the close of the meeting an adjourned meeting was held and a class in the American School of Politics was organized. This is an effort to apply the Chautauqua idea to the study of politics. Among the members who have already united in this enterprise are several College Presidents, Ex-Governors and others. Ann Arbor has a class of 23; Ypsilanti of 16; Evanston, Ill., of 80. The effort is a new one but is advancing rapidly. Among the persons who have already joined here are Prof. Hammond and Dr. Howell. The general public is invited to interest itself in this movement. Particulars can be obtained of M. P. Brown.

THE AMERICAN SCHOOL OF POLITICS.

This is the title of a new organization recently started at Chicago. We gather a few points from their prospectus. For full particulars, address Walter Thomas Mills, 179 Washington St. Room 25, Chicago, or call M. P. Brown, Tecumseh.

PURPOSE.

The purpose of "The American School of Politics" is to contribute to a more enlightened and valuable citizenship by diffusing a more general knowledge of public questions of current controversy and of the science and method of honorable politics.

PLAN OF WORK.

The course of reading will hardly exceed one thousand pages, but it will be carefully selected from standard authorities; when necessary it will be edited for our purpose, and will be arranged in logical sequence.

Work on this course of reading can be commenced at once—it must be completed by June 20th, 1888.

In connection with the annual convocation at Lake Bluff, Ill., commencing July 1, 1888, and lasting ten days, will be held a summer session of this School of Politics.

This work will close with an examination, and those who complete the course will be given certificates, and if deemed otherwise qualified will be recommended to Campaign Committees as prepared for party work.

ADMISSION.

Any person, without regard to age, sex, race or politics, may become a member of this School. The sole condition of membership is the filling out of an application blank in due form to be accompanied with a subscription for "THE STATESMAN," price one dollar.

SUGGESTIONS.

Individuals may take this course of reading alone, but it will be found of very great advantage to form a local reading club for mutual encouragement and help. Stated meetings could be held, debates or other discussions on the topics studied arranged for, or reviews of the work made under competent direction.

These reading clubs could be organized independent of any other association or in connection with the regular meetings of Prohibition Clubs, or other associations.

We want some wood.

THE DICKENS ENTERTAINMENT.

A Brilliant Array of Characters in Costume Scenes from the Great Novelist Portrayed on the Stage.

The second Library Entertainment this season was given at the Opera House last Thursday evening. It was

The officers of the Association having decided to present some of the leading characters in Dickens' novels, selected a committee to take charge of the arrangements and summarily drafted them into the service. The committee consisted of Mrs. Corey, J. D. Shull and wife, John J. Orr and wife, S. P. Hosmer and Sena Hosmer, with Mrs. J. F. Hicks and Mrs. H. S. Lee to superintend the tableaux. This committee had to perform the task assigned them, nolens volens, and they applied the same rule to the persons whom they selected to take part. They refused to take "No" for an answer from anyone. All the victims had to do was to eat humble pie, hunt up a costume, if they could find any, and take the characters assigned them.

As the curtain arose for the first scene, Pickwick himself was discovered, comfortably seated in a swivel chair, with Sam Weller at his side. Pickwick says, "Sam!"

Sam replies, "Sir?"

Pickwick says, "Who are all these people?"

Sam replies: "Why, I've known these people ever since I was pitched neck and crop into this wide world to play at leap-frog with its troubles."

Then came the caravan trooping across the stage. The Copperfield characters led the van, followed by those from our Mutual Friend, Bleak House, Pickwick, Dombey and Son, Oliver Twist, Nicholas Nickleby and all the rest. Sam introduced them one by one to Pickwick, with a brief description of each. After they had all been introduced they passed across the stage a second time and down through the audience, keeping step to the music of a slow march. It is utterly useless to attempt any description of the costumes. This town was raked over, from Judge Stacy's to the Globe Mill, from Uncle Billy Bresie's to Jim Patterson's, to find costumes, and the search proved wonderfully successful. Those who were present saw the affair with their own eyes. Those who were absent mustn't ask the printer to supply the lack occasioned by their own negligence.

After the grand march came a few special scenes,—the famous trial of Bardell vs. Pickwick and the Fainting Scene in Pickwick, Wackford Squeers's school at Do-the-Boys Hall, Jarley's celebrated Wax Figures, and Fezziwig's Ball. These were interspersed with tableaux and vocal music. The tableaux were Pickwick in the wrong room and Miss Lucreevy the Hair artist. Carrie Powers sang a solo, "The Spider and the Fly," which was beautifully rendered and Miss Gregg sang two solos with fine effect—"Bid me Good Bye," and "Take me, Jamie." Jennie Root presided at the piano most admirably, and it was no easy task for such a program, while the City orchestra filled in the waiting places with some of their best selections. The committee in charge are entitled to much credit for the completeness of the entertainment, as it involved an immense amount of labor. The Library fund netted about $70 above all expenses. Our reporter found a cozy corner behind the scenes where he could see and not be seen, and sharpening his plumbago he compiled a list of the characters as they appeared. We believe the list will be found both complete and correct. If there are any omissions please attribute it to the reporter's embarrassment, rather than to any intentional neglect on his part.

OUTSPOKEN ANARCHY.

SOME VERY VIGOROUS SPEECHES UPON A "DEAD ISSUE."

[illegible] of the Executed Apostles of Socialism [illegible] Chicago—The Dead Martyrs Compared with the Saviour and the Cross Declared "Marching On."

[illegible] The last scene of [illegible] was begun at the City Hall in Chicago [illegible] the battle of the Haymarket was fought. The battle, of course, was [illegible] Anarchy defeated in short order [illegible] the struggle was clearly and [illegible] the ground [illegible] Combines were formed [illegible] Mrs. Van Zandt, Nina Van Zandt Spies and [illegible] Spies.

[illegible] There was no [illegible]

It was just one o'clock when the members of the procession, who have been charged with the duty of providing for the families of the executed men, passed under the stone archway of the cemetery entrance, two and two. There a hard was made, and a crowd of weeping women, all of them attired in the sable habiliments of woe, with long black veils covering them from head to foot, emerged from the lodge and and joined the procession. Among them were Mrs. Van Zandt and Nina Van Zandt-Spies, Mrs. Spies, Gretchen Spies and her sister, Mrs. Parsons. On the other hand, Mrs. Engel and her daughter, Mrs. Fischer, and Elsi Fraedel, Louis Lingg's sweetheart. As the head of the procession reached the platform the last of the five black-covered coffins—that containing the remains of Adolph Fischer—which was covered with a pall that bearing the printed inscription, "Hurrah for Anarchy"—was carried from the vault and placed in [illegible] with the others. Then there was a slight delay, during which the caskets were covered with floral tributes. The largest of these, [illegible] with the inscription in blue [illegible] "Lingg," was placed on Parsons's coffin. Another of Lingg was laid two [illegible] of flowers and immortelles, contributed by the Certain [illegible] and the Brewers' Union, of Chicago, [illegible] together with a [illegible] from his sweetheart. Wreaths were also [illegible] the other caskets [illegible] the committee.

From the ends of the caskets were removed, leaving the faces exposed below the glass, and it was announced that every one present would be afforded a final opportunity of gazing upon the features of the dead. There was a [illegible] crush toward the platform, but order was quickly restored, and the [illegible] people passed by the [illegible] single file. Many gray-headed men and white-haired women, with toddling children, girls and boys, out of their [illegible] with babies in their arms. Negro [illegible] a piece of [illegible] or a black rosette. Few of the women could control their emotion, and their tears fell copiously, while many of the men wept freely.

The faces of the dead were calm and placid, indications of decomposition, however, had made themselves manifest, and on by the sallow discoloration, but in the purple spots which stood out upon the cheeks and forehead of the dead men. The casket containing the remains of Louis Lingg was placed at the end of the platform, and as the head people passed by [illegible] down upon the features, which, in spite of the skill of surgeons and embalmers still retained most horribly disfigured, few could repress a cry of horror. About two-thirds of the gathering had viewed the remains when the rapid approach of dark gave warning to the committee that the form [illegible] should be executed. The members of the Socialistic Men's Choir were placed at the head of the platform and sang the stanzas of Grand Lyric, "An Gräber Unserer Freunde"—"At the Grave of Our Friends."

When the funeral chant had concluded [illegible] stepped upon the platform immediately beside the casket containing the body of Lingg, and a deep hush at once fell upon the assemblage. He said that they had met together to pay a last token of respect to their deceased comrades, to gaze upon their faces, and let them a final farewell. They were not there as common people, as people whose [illegible] dead men had championed, whose rights they had espoused, and for whom they had given their lives. They had gathered [illegible] to bury [illegible] capitalists, and to strip [illegible] the mask of belief in the principle for which they had forfeited their lives. The dead men before them were [illegible] martyrs in the cause of humanity, the [illegible] martyrs in the cause of freedom, the [illegible] martyrs in the cause of [illegible] and [illegible] to the principle [illegible] the [illegible] of the opening [illegible]
